Local police merger urged

Staff, cost efficiencies stressed, mayors wary

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The B.C. Police Commission has urged total amalgamation of municipal police forces in Greater Victoria.

The commission, in a report completed late last month, recommends amalgamation of police forces in Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt, Oak Bay and Central Saanich as the best way of achieving greater efficiency and economy in policing the area.

In a task force study undertaken by the commission in 1978, amalgamation was one of several options proposed.

Judge Roy McQueen, commission chairman, told the Times today the report, the result of more than four months' study, has been sent to mayors, police boards and police unions of the five municipalities asking for their comments.

McQueen said it was not the commission's role to force the decision on the municipalities but only to spark debate that might lead to agreement on what it considers a good idea.

He said the study did not involve the western communities which are serviced by the RCMP.

However, he said logic dictates they should eventually be included.

He noted the 30,000 residents in the western communities pay nothing in direct taxes for policing because the area is unincorporated while residents of incorporated communities over 5,000, such as Sidney pay for police costs through their property taxes.

McQueen said he expected amalgamation would be met with considerable opposition from local politicians but thought the concept was generally endorsed by police officers.

"My main conern is certainly service to the public and cost.

"We'll have to study it and see if it means better service to the public."

Mayor Doug Watts of Oak Bay was also apprehensive about amalgamation but said he favored centralizing certain support services.

Mayor Mel Couvelier of Saanich was out of town today and Esquimalt mayor Ken Hill and Victoria mayor Bill Tindall couldn't be reached for comment.

The five municipal mayors and police boards have been discussing integration of some services for several months.

Among the services being considered are records, dispatch, identification, a common emergency number (911), and specialized services such as a dog-tracking team.

McQueen said it was ridiculous for each department to have its own dispatch unit.

"The costs are just tremendous," he said. "Each department needs at least five people to operate the unit on a 24-hour basis."

By AL FORREST

For the first time in a year the Victoria mortgage interest rate has gone below the 14-per-cent mark in a bidding war for customers.

The downward trend is expected to continue if the Bank of Canada rate falls on Thursday.

The Victoria interest rate has ranged from 10 per cent to 17.5 per cent during the past five years.

National Trust today became the first company to offer a rate below 14 per cent this year when it announced five-year closed mortgages now are available at 13.75 per cent.

Later in the morning the Royal Bank of Canada said that effective Thursday it will cut its mortgage rate by 1.75 points to 13.75 per cent for one, three and five-year terms.

The Royal is also chopping its prime lending rate to 14.75 per cent from 15.75 per cent on Thursday.

Other banks, trust companies and credit unions also announced reductions and new mortgaging plans.

The Bank of Nova Scotia has reduced its rate to 14.25, down three-quarters of a point, for one, three and five-year terms.

Toronto-Dominion has cut its rate to 14.5 per cent for all closed mortgages. This is down from 15 per cent for one and three-year terms and down from 15.25 for five-year money.

Royal Trust has reduced its rate to 14.25 per cent for all closed mortgages.

Victoria Public Savings Credit Union has reduced its rate to 14.75 per cent from 15.75 per cent for one-year open mortgages.

The companies are responding to a slide in Canadian rates and a collapse in the United States.

For example, below the border, Savings and Loan companies, the largest residential mortgage lenders in the nation, reduced its rates from 17.5 to 12.75 in a single week.

If, as expected, the Bank of Canada announces a lower bank rate on Thursday, a new round of reductions could be forthcoming next week, although spokesmen for financial houses said the bottom might not be far away.

A yes vote in the Quebec referendum next week could push interest rates up, despite the downward trend in the U.S.

In Victoria, W.A. Southwell said the psychological shock of sudden high interest rates during the winter and early spring was almost more than some families could bear.

"I know it was something they were discussing every day and it was a great worry. I hope people will

Clashes mount in Seoul

SEOUL (Reuter) — Hundreds of armed troops and vehicles moved into the centre of Seoul today to seal off areas around official residences and government offices after thousands of police and students battled in the streets.

Witnesses said at least 20 police and 29 students were injured, some seriously. It was the bloodiest clash between militant students and police since campus disturbances to reinforce demands for democratic reforms and the lifting of martial law started at the end of March.

In one incident about 200 police kicked and clubbed the front ranks of a 50,000-strong student march as it approached the city hall.

The chanting demonstrators, including many women, approached within 70 metres of the government offices before police swinging clubs hurled themselves at the leading students. Witnesses counted 15 students felled and kicked. They were arrested while the rest of the crowd scattered into side streets.

In another battle at Yonsei University student sources said at least 14 of their number were injured.

Delivered paper cost up

To help offset rising costs, especially newsprint, the home delivery price of the Victoria Times will be increased 50 cents a month effective June 1, Circulation Director Roy Comrie said today.

Part of the increase will go to the carriers, he said, adding that the new home delivery price of $5 a month still represents a considerable saving over the news stand price of 25 cents on weekdays and 30 cents on Saturday.

Current prepaid subscriptions will continue until expiry at the present rate of $4.50 a month. The old price will also apply to prepaid subscriptions up to one year in duration received in the Times office before June 1, 1980.

Return of traffic fines eyed

Attorney-General Allan Williams, police officials, and automobile club executives today admitted the system of assessing penalty points against bad drivers is not working and a return to a fine system may be needed.

Their acknowledgment followed a Statistics Canada report Tuesday that shows B.C. has the worst per capita driving record of any province.

Representatives of police departments, the motor-vehicle branch, the B.C. Automobile Association and other groups were meeting in Vancouver this morning to evaluate the StatsCan report.

Williams said he will prod the government's Motor-Vehicle Task Force to come up with interim recommendations designed to put the screws on bad drivers.

The task force is looking at the possibility of replacing the point system with fines, he said. Or there may be a combination of fines plus points.

That way you get the immediate financial impact of the fine plus the loss of licence later if the driver persists in his bad habits, Williams said.

The minister said the points system by itself appears to be good for only one thing — producing paperwork.

"It is producing a tremendous volume of paperwork for police officers which is not having any positive results and is just a waste of manpower."

Bob Egby, Insurance Corp. of B.C. spokesman, said the Statistics Canada figures surprised him.

"We know there's a problem, but I didn't know about this."

William Snowdon, Victoria's new police chief, has noticed a difference in drivers since he's moved from the Mainland.

"The drivers over here are noticeably more courteous and less aggressive than in Vancouver," Snowdon said.

"The point system is not a valid enforcement tool by itself," he said.

The word that B.C. drivers are the nation's worst surprised him.

"I've driven in some eastern cities and I would

City poultry plant closing

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The Sooke Road plant of Maplewood Poultry Processors Ltd. will close by Tuesday and all 100 employees laid off.

But the Times learned today a deal to sell the plant to Pan-Ready Poultry of Port Coquitlam is being put together.

Maplewood manager Len Guy, asked about a rumored shutdown, admitted layoff notices were posted last Friday.

He refused further comment, directing all questions to Maplewood president Brian Hambley, who was reached at Maplewood's idled Abbotsford plant.

"The Victoria plant is in the process of being sold and we would hope that any interruption of its operation would be minimal," Hambley said.

He pointed out that the possible sale of Maplewood to Cargill Grain is still dependent on approval from the Foreign Investment Review Agency so it's not definite, despite the government's reversal Tuesday on the sale to the international conglomerate.

(See also page 28.)

"Ottawa's talking several weeks or months before anything's done," Hambley said.

Maplewood's Abbotsford operation, which employed 135, was suspended April 18, and Hambley says poultry producers are feeling the pressure.

"It's a very sad state of affairs, but the minister (Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt) knew this would happen.

"We told him about it weeks ago but he wouldn't listen. He did it his way," Hambley said.

Pan-Ready Poultry, which operates Scott's Poultry in Port Coquitlam, is the growers' cooperative that offered to buy Maplwood's Abbotsford plant but just withdrew its bid.

Hambley was asked how Pan-Ready could buy the Victoria plant if it had been unable to make good its offer for the Abbotsford operation.

"They're getting a little help from Victoria," he said.

"But nothing is complete," he added. "There are many loose ends.

"We don't want to get our customers upset and we're confident there won't be any disruption of supply."

Levesque sounds like beaten man

By PETER HADEKEL

MONTREAL — Rene Levesque sounds like a beaten man in the final week of the referendum campaign.

While he has not yet conceded defeat in public, Levesque has already begun to make excuses for the setback the Yes side is expected to receive in next Tuesday's referendum on sovereignty-association.

And ironically, Levesque is delivering his message to the largest, most exuberant crowds of his entire campaign. With less than a week to go, Yes organizers have finally agreed to stage mass rallies where thousands of supporters sing, wave Quebec flags and cheer for a sovereign Quebec.

But it is all a bit too late, as the tone in Levesque's words betrays.

"No matter what happens we have at least won a solid, healthy and beautiful majority of francophone voters," he says in putting the best face on the outcome.

Levesque then delivers the punchline. It's the English voters who will be responsible for defeating the referendum because "they will be voting massively No."

"The unilingual anglophones especially are shut up in a propaganda that is manipulated and controlled by an establishment that has always exploited Quebec," he says.

"They'll do anything to keep us stuck in the status quo."

Levesque told 5,000 boisterous supporters in Montreal North that it would be "hypocritical" to ignore the French-English split in the vote, adding that the real answer to the referendum question must come from francophones.

Quoting from the 1963 report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, Levesque said the real conflict in Canada is between two majorities: the English one in Canada and the French one in Quebec.

Levesque's attempt to make scapegoats of Quebec's English minority is a subtle one. He says he respects their right to vote No and he believes in the principle of "one man one vote."

But at the same time he ridicules Claude Ryan, leader of the No campaign, for wanting a vote "without roots, without family, without belonging.

"We've got to start looking after ourselves, and it's high time," he says.

Claude Ryan has asked Levesque to prepare his troops to accept defeat, but if anything, Levesque is stoking the fires of Quebec nationalism more fiercely in the final days.

He is bitter about the hundreds of thousands of dollars spent by the federal government on referendum-related advertising in Quebec in the last few weeks, — spending which he claims is "illegal."

The federal campaign — "drowning" Quebec in pro-federalist propaganda — is another excuse Levesque is using to explain a No defeat.

"It's the most indescribable campaign I have ever seen," he says, "I never throught the federal government could have sunk so low. They are using open treachery and a complete lack of scruples."

The object of Levesque's anger is an anti-alcoholism campaign being run by Health and Welfare Canada which employs the slogan "No thanks."

The phrase, which is one of Claude Ryan's main campaign slogans, appears on billboards across the province and is printed on a pamphlet being mailed out with all family allowance cheques in Quebec.

This allows the federal government to circumvent the strict spending controls in Quebec's referendum law which limit each side to $2.1 million.

The Yes side is seeking an injunction against the advertisements from Quebec's specially-constituted referendum council of three provincial court judges.

The defeatist tone in Levesque's voice comes through again when he talks about the thousands of petitions and committees for a Yes which sprang up all over Quebec during the campaign.

"Because of this, workers and neighbors began talking to each other for the first time. It will have a lasting effect on Quebec society."

And whatever the result of the referendum, he says, the Quebec people have made more progress in the last 25 years than any other nation in the world.

have thought they'd be worse."

"We live in a province where there's a lot of drinking and that's obviously having an effect."

While he's convinced the province's Counterattack program is having an impact, he says it's difficult to measure the results because it's a prevention measure.

"You don't know what might have happened if we didn't have the program," he said.

"One big problem in B.C. is the total incapability of dealing with juvenile traffic offenders," Snowdon said. "The 16-year-old traffic offender is not processed in adult court, and the juvenile court treats such matters far differently."

The StatsCan report, based on surveys doné in March, shows that British Columbians have more accidents a vehicle, a thousand people and a million kilometres of travel than any other drivers in the nation.

B.C. drivers registered 7.36 accidents for every 100 vehicles during 1977 compared with a national average of 5.40. The only province that came close was Manitoba, with 6.78 accidents.

In accidents for every 1,000 people, B.C.'s rate was 45.9 compared with a national average of 29.04. Manitoba again was second at 39.74.

Accidents a million "vehicle-kilometres" produced 5.88 accidents in B.C. compared with 3.68 nationally and 5.37 in Manitoba.

Provincial motor-vehicle branch records show there were 615 fatal motor accidents in 1977, but the death count rose to 636 in 1978 and 737 in 1979.

Oil talks start over

EDMONTON (CP) — Federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde met Alberta counterpart Merv Leitch Tuesday for the second time in two months to discuss a new oil pricing agreement.

After their 2½-hour session, the ministers told reporters they reviewed most elements of the current oil and natural gas issue, but that the negotiations would have to start from scratch.

Lalonde, who met Leitch one day after the Alberta minister indicated he was remaining firm on the province's energy pricing stand, said Tuesday's meeting was business-like, courteous and civilized.

Mortgage rates dropping

take advantage of rates when they go down to get into long-term mortgages."

He said this involved the risk of paying more than the current market at some time during the five-year period but this was better than being in danger of losing the family home during a period of runaway interest rates.

National currently offers 13.75 per cent mortgages on five-year terms only. Its rate for four years is 14 and for one-to-three year mortgages 14.25 per cent. All quotes are for closed mortgages.

Open mortgages are going out in the range of 15 to 15.25 per cent.

The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce said today it is offering a new type of mortgage that allows homeowners a one-shot chance to get a lower rate during the five-year term.

Eugene Zinkowski, assistant manager of the main branch of the CIBC in Victoria, said the new plan, called an optional early renewable mortgage, probably will be at one-half a point more than the current rate.

For example the bank is currently writing mortgages at 14.5 per cent and the optional early renewable one is 15 per cent.

Westcoast Savings Credit Union announced today it will soon be offering a mortgage rate tied to the bank prime rate.

This would involve a fixed monthly payment that never changes during the two-year period. The amount of interest being paid would depend on monthly changes in the prime rate.

The mortgage might be written at exactly the prime rate and it would stay at bank prime during the two-year term.

If the monthly payment is $400 and interest is $360 when the mortgage begins, the interest might go up to $370 or $380 with increases in the prime rate but the monthly payment would stay at $400 — unless the interest rate went through the top.

Vancouver bus hijacked

VANCOUVER (CP) — A B.C. Hydro trolley bus was hijacked Tuesday after the driver stopped to make a telephone call.

Police said the bus was taken over by one of five young passengers and driven nine downtown blocks before it hit a power pole.

Two female passengers suffered slight injuries and damage to the bus was described as minor.

A caravan of 'grannies' to challenge Dempster

VANCOUVER (CP) — Therese Tessier, 56, who last year became the first woman to make it solo up the Dempster Highway to Inuvik in a camper, is planning to do the same thing this summer with about 100 other women.

She calls it "a caravan of grannies."

The trip will start June 15 in Cache Creek, and will retrace her last year's route to Tuktoyaktuk on the Arctic Ocean. Then the vehicles will be taken by barge along the Mackenzie and Athabaska rivers to Northern Alberta.

But before the three-month trip starts, she has a lot of work to do — interviewing the more than 200 applicants who have said they want to join her, and finding a place to do it.

"I don't know how it's going to go.

"The first problem I have to solve is where to meet the people. I just drive around in my camper all the time. That's where I live."

Deciding who gets to go is "going to be difficult, so I've had to come up with some way to screen the applicants."

First, she said, applicants will have to show her a "clean bill of health" from a doctor. Then, they'll have to supply a safety certificate from a garage that states their vans are in sound mechanical order.

The last catch, she said, will be a full wallet.

"I figure it's going to take about $3,500 for the trip. That can be in cash, credit cards or cheques."

Throughout North America, women are reaching out for the challenge, including one 82-year-old who wrote saying she could "out-hike, out-pack and out-canoe any 35-year-old."

And why no men on the trip? Simple, she says.

"None have applied."

Asian refugees in good health

VANCOUVER (CP) — The state of health of the 300 Vietnamese and Cambodian refugees who arrive in B.C. each month is "pretty good," say two doctors responsible for medical screening of the arrivals from Southeast Asia.

Dr. Allen Heimann and Dr. Douglas Mackenzie told the senior staff conference of Community Health Services that since January of this year, 4,387 refugees, mainly Vietnamese boat people of Chinese origin and Cambodians who escaped persecution and the threat of annihilation by starvation, have arrived in B.C. and have been screened medically.

"Their health is pretty good considering everything they've been through," Heimann, an epidemiologist from Victoria, in charge of the screening program for the provincial ministry of health, said later Tuesday in an interview.

Mackenzie, who has retired as the chief of tuberculosis control for the ministry, agreed.

Mackenzie said that when the boat people first started arriving about a year ago, there was some concern B.C. might be subjected to an influx of exotic infectious diseases, "but this just hasn't happened."

They are checked for tuberculosis by medical personnel at the four refugee camps in southeast Asia, he said.

Some arriving here have already received treatment, but none are permitted to enter Canada if their tuberculosis is in an infectious state, Mackenzie said.

Arson cause of fires?

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Forest service officials suspect arson is the cause of at least six fires now burning in the Fort Nelson area of the Prince George forest fire region.

"We're quite certain a number of fires have been deliberately set," district manager Art Joyce said Tuesday. "At least six or more."

Eleven new fires were reported in the district Tuesday, bringing the total to 123. Six were started by lightning.

Police raid homes

VANCOUVER (CP) — An RCMP spokesman said the commercial crime squad raided seven homes and business Tuesday as part of a joint investigation with the Winnipeg detachment into the Winnipeg Mortgage Exchange Ltd.

The spokesman said the raids carried out in Vancouver, North Vancouver, Richmond and West Vancouver involved a law firm, a chartered accounting firm, two other businesses and three private residences. He would not say whether anything was seized.

He said Winnipeg RCMP had received several complaints from people who invested money in the company. He said the company had invested about $16 million in mortgages in B.C. and had defaulted on some. The company went into receivership last August.

Uranium ban

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Fourteen Japanese union leaders received a standing ovation from delegates to the Confederation of Canadian Unions convention Monday after calling for a ban on the export of Canadian uranium and Candu reactors to that country.

"We would like Canada to stop exporting bad things to Japan," a Japanese translator told the delegates. "We would like it if you exported only good things."

The Japanese leaders from Sohio, a national union representing 4.5 million workers, including most government workers, teachers and railway workers, are seeking international support for a moratorium on nuclear power in Japan.

Spill fear unwarranted

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — The Hooker Chemical plant may not be as great a hazard as North Shore residents fear, says a report from the North Vancouver Chamber of Commerce's community hazards study committee.

The report plays down figures in the Beak Consultants' report on the plant which suggests that a spill of 400 pounds of chlorine is likely every eight years and an earthquake causing release of 1,000 pounds every 30 years.

The chamber report suggests that Hooker's 22-year disaster-free record contradicts the Beak figures.

The chamber report says that the possibility of a chemical spill during transportation, especially in a rail car derailment, is a far greater danger than a spill at the plant.

It also criticizes gaps in present emergency plans — lack of a complete North Shore evacuation plan, failure of railways and other transportation facilities to report all accidents involving hazardous chemicals, and a failure to educate the public on how to respond to an emergency.

While praising Hooker's safety record, the report criticizes the firm for failure to communicate with the public.

Before the release of the Beak report and the subsequent public concern, many residents near the plant did not even know it manufactured chlorine, it says.

CHANGE YOUR CAT LITTER.

The water test shows how Litter Fresh™ expands.

NEW LITTER FRESH STAYS FRESHER LONGER THAN CLAY LITTER BECAUSE IT IS MORE THAN TWICE AS ABSORBENT.

Clay just gets wet. Litter Fresh expands. It soaks up more than twice the moisture that clay does. So Litter Fresh stays fresher longer.

Because it stays fresher longer, you may decide to use less cat litter, or, you may decide to use the same amount and change it less often.

LITTER FRESH CONTAINS CHLOROPHYLL. NATURE'S OWN ODOUR FIGHTER.

Chlorophyll is a natural deodorizer. It actually fights ammonia, the cause of cat box odours. So, new Litter Fresh gives you super odour control. It's nicer for you, your cat and your guests.

Litter Fresh gets its odour-fighting chlorophyll from alfalfa.

LITTER FRESH IS DUST FREE.

Clay litter is dirt so of course there is dust. Dust when you put it in. Dust when the cat tracks it out. Litter Fresh comes in tiny, dust-free pellets.

Litter Fresh is such a refreshing change.

The Globe and Disneyland

Satisfying concerns over financing, leases, zoning, parking, servicing, and the effect on surrounding businesses and communities should only be part of the municipal evaluation process for a tourist development the size of the proposed Bankside Elizabethan Village.

Of equal importance is the contribution it will make to the quality of life for the residents of Greater Victoria. That does not mean how effectively the project will extract tourist dollars and contribute to the economic health of the region at large.

Many residents would likely relish the opportunity to watch Shakespearean plays in a theatre similar to an Elizabethan Globe playhouse. A sizeable number of 'locals' would probably become regular customers. It could be of educational value.

But most residents would probably not be willing to compete with hordes of tourists and their automobiles for tickets and parking spaces. The question that arises is whether the Disneyland atmosphere of the Bankside Village ('Disneyland' was the word used by Barry Morse, the society's artistic director) will steer Victorians clear of the development.

The plan presented by the society is slick, and its buoyant optimism is easy to criticize. The idea is to meld tourist-related commerce with culture, and become a rarity in modern theatrical circles: a self-supporting operation.

The site for the Bankside Village and the Globe theatre is the 6.3 acre Maltwood property near Royal Oak just north of Victoria. The Municipality of Saanich, which purchased the land for $375,000, has approved in principle an interim lease that would give the society 18 months to raise about $7.4 million to construct the necessary buildings. Presumably the interim lease would be granted if engineering studies proved satisfactory.

To its credit, the society is not asking Saanich for anything but the use of the land. In fact it has offered to retire the municipality's debt on it and actually purchase it for Saanich. Nice touch.

The promoters anticipate that the Bankside Village — a recreation of an Elizabethan town complete with 60 small commercial operations, gardens, artisans, sporting events — will make enough money to more than cover the $900,000 deficit anticipated in staging three productions at the Globe during the 31-week season.

So far the society has not demonstrated that it has either the money or the expertise to launch this scheme. As yet there are no guarantees that the theatre will operate as long as the village operates.

But given the scrutiny it will face when seeking private or public funds there would seem little harm in allowing it 18 months to come up with the money, if the engineering studies are favorable.

The theatre and village will open April 1 and continue to October 31. In the six weeks on either end of Vancouver Island's tourist bulge, there should be ample opportunity for local theatre goers who don't like crowds. Whether that will be sufficient contribution to Victoria's quality of life is, at the moment, anyone's guess.

Weathering reports

People say a lot about the weather here in southern B.C. For the most part their reports are favorable. People also say a lot about the weather in Edmonton. Their reports are not so good.

The City of Edmonton has recognized this and has proved one of two things: Either Alberta really does have the best 'liveability' climate of six major cities in Canada including Vancouver, or the city's business development consultants are worried about their jobs.

Edmonton mayor Cec Purves noted at a press conference called to release the Climate Report that "the fact we call our football team The Eskimos hasn't helped" stop misconceptions about the city's weather.

After analysing Environment Canada's 30-year Normals Tables, the city's business consultants concluded that in terms of temperature, weather and windspeed, Edmonton was tied in second place with Toronto (both behind Vancouver) for climatic comfort. However, in terms of liveability ranking, which includes such factors as wind chill factor, hours of sunshine, days of frost, and pollution, they say Edmonton is number one. Surprise.

Now maybe Mayor Purves will explain why so many Albertans play, retire and live in southern B.C.

The saving of Chrysler

OTTAWA — It was a night of sweat, suspense and mad dashes across and through downtown Toronto.

The behind-the-scenes drama that led to the signing of a $200-million government rescue deal for Chrysler Canada in the early hours of Saturday morning was political brinksmanship at its best.

Three strong-willed men, all acutely aware that North America's seventh largest corporation was just days from bankruptcy, fought for three hours to break the deadlock preventing the U.S. government from stepping in with the largest financial rescue package in history.

There was Industry Minister Herb Gray, two weeks from his 49th birthday, who spent the night making frenzied dashes between the bargaining session in a government office and a Liberal Party reception he had agreed to host at the Harbor Castle Hotel, a couple of miles away.

Threesome bargains

There was Chrysler president Lee Iacocca, 55, the flamboyant car-man, who had cut his own salary to $1 a year to do his bit for the gasping company. Cancelling previous plans, he had flown into Toronto on a company plane a few hours earlier.

And there was Ontario Industry Minister Larry Grossman, 36, an ambitious lawyer with a eye on the provincial premiership, whose stubborn refusal to give Chrysler a cent until it improved its offer, had everyone from Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau to U.S. Treasury Secretary William Miller clucking worriedly.

That tension-ridden night will long be etched in Gray's memory.

It began to take shape Friday afternoon when Frank Miller, the worried 54-year-old U.S. cabinet member in charge of finances, phoned Gray (also Prime Minister Trudeau and Ontario Premier William Davis) from Washington and warned in his pronounced Texas accent that the time for bluffing and bargaining with Chrysler was dangerously short.

Without help from the U.S. government, the company would collapse by the end of May. And without Canadian government participation, the U.S. aid package absolutely could not go ahead.

By seven that evening, Gray had rounded up Grossman and Iacocca and arranged a secret meeting in Grossman's Toronto office for later that night. By 10 p.m. the three men sat facing each other. For three hours they fought over the future of Chrysler's 14,500 workers — 4,900 of whom are now on indefinite layoff.

Grossman demanded assurance in writing that their jobs would be protected. Iacocca insisted such guarantees are impossible for a company fighting for its life. Gray — having heard this fight many times before — watched, mostly.

Slowly, painfully, a compromise emerged.

Monday morning, he sat thinking about it over a breakfast of corn flakes and bacon in a parliamentary cafeteria. He looked drained. He'd just completed three radio interviews and was on the way to his fourth. In two and a half hours, he was to go before the House of Commons and defend the Chrysler decision.

HERB GRAY

Although immediate reaction to the Chrysler announcement was overwhelmingly positive, Gray knows he has strident critics. He is bracing himself for a raft of charges that he has invited every faltering company in the country to seek support from Ottawa.

He is unhappily aware, too, that the deal provided little immediate relief for his suffering constituents in Windsor, where one out of every five workers is without a job. Even in Gray's most optimistic scenario, it will be at least five years before Chrysler will be able to rehire the workers it has already laid off — most of them in Gray's hometown.

"The nail-biting stage is over, but the the struggle has really only begun," he said, between hurried mouthfuls.

For him, that struggle is to make sure the company lives up to the tough conditions the Canadian government exacted from it on paper Saturday.

For Chrysler, the struggle is to stay alive.

Despite the the $1.5-billion package approved in Washington Saturday by the U.S. Chrysler loan guarantee board, no one is certain the troubled automaker can survive. Iacocca is bravely predicting that the government backing "will help establish Chrysler Corp. as a strong competitor in the market of the 1980s," but some industry analysts doubt the company will last beyond the end of the the year.

Assuming it does survive, Gray and his officials will be hanging around its corporate headquarters like mosquitoes, examining every cost-cutting scheme and retrenchment plan Chrysler proposes, to make sure Canadian workers are not unfairly hit. They will check its investments, watch its research spending. Already the department has begun setting up its monitoring team.

Gray's next task is to transform the Chrysler agreement into legislation he can get his colleagues in Parliament to pass fairly rapidly.

Neglected work

Then comes the mountain of departmental work which piled up, neglected, while Chrysler occupied all Gray's waking hours.

As the hard-working minister listed the tasks ahead, his toast sat forgotten. His tea grew cold. An aide came to drag him away to his next radio interview.

Wouldn't he like a holiday after all he's been through?

"There's no time for that yet."

Before he rushed away, Gray shared one last little-known episode of the Chrysler story.

It happened Saturday morning. While millions of Canadians — including Grossman and all officials involved in the Friday night pressure-cooker gratefully slept in — Gray was up shortly after 8.

The Toronto Liberals were having a breakfast and he'd promised to be there. He was.

JAMES RESTON

Difficult for Reagan to lose

WASHINGTON — The real question about this presidential election is not who will win it but who will lose it. The game is likely to be lost on fumbles, and on this negative test Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan are about even.

On the losing side, Carter may be a bit ahead, for he had more to lose. His economic record is the worst since Herbert Hoover's. His personal record in antagonizing the most influential members of his own party in the Congress has been unmatched in recent times by any president but Richard Nixon.

These things may have been unavoidable, but recently Carter has shown a gift for stumbling into avoidable disasters — by ignoring and then losing his secretary of state, Cyrus Vance, over the rescue operation in Iran, and then by criticizing his old buddy, absentmindedly, after he was gone.

Economic fiddling

For "losers," this is a formidable record, but nobody should underestimate Reagan's ability to match it or beat it. Reagan's best hope of election is the disastrous economic policy of the Carter administration, but he has fiddled for months about defining his own economic policy. And he keeps talking nonsense about foreign policy.

He suggested in San Francisco last week that the United States should join with its allies in Western Europe and Japan to send a "warning" to the Soviet Union that the West would not tolerate the overthrow of the government of Saudi Arabia, either by internal uprising or external aggression. And if we send such a warning, he added, we should send it only with the collaboration of our allies, "who are so dependent on OPEC oil."

What does this mean? Reagan must know that the allies, precisely because they are dependent on OPEC oil and have other economic interests with the Soviet Union, would never join the United States in such a "warning," and would want to know what we would do if both the Saudis and the Soviets ignored it.

But the former governor of California keeps babbling on about "punishing" the Soviets by taking military action against their ally in Cuba, without saying what this means. He accused the Carter administration, in San Francisco, of "hypocrisy at its worst in cozying up to the Soviets," precisely at the time when Carter was so angry at the leaders in Moscow that he didn't even have the common sense or good manners to attend Marshall Tito's funeral in Belgrade.

It is not going to be easy for Ronald Reagan to lose this election, considering the economic slump and the divisions within the Democratic Party, but there are two ways in which he might be able to blow it.

One is to assume that the American people are so frustrated by the humiliation in Iran and so angry at the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan that they are in a mood to go back to the simpler anti-Soviet confrontations of the cold war, with all that that means in much higher defense budgets, more inflation, and less money for social services and the restoration of our cities. Reagan may be right on this, but it's not a good political bet.

The second is for Reagan, whose presidential nomination seems sure enough, to assume that he can also win in November without fairly soon indicating who is going with him as vice president, secretary of state and members of his cabinet.

Carter and Reagan have at least one thing in common, aside from their ambition to reside in the White House. They both lack the confidence of a majority of the American people, and this circumstance is not likely to change, no matter who wins or loses, unless they come forward before the election with teams of men and women who can give the nation a sense of a new beginning.

Carter has at least made a beginning with the appointment of Secretary of State Muskie, who has already demonstrated in a few days what one new man can do by speaking out on his own with courage and humor, even in amiable criticism of himself and his own president.

Cabinet shuffles

Carter will undoubtedly make more such moves. He knows that he's in serious trouble and will probably lose on his own, and he is looking to a new administration with new people as a means of restoring confidence and assuring his re-election.

Reagan has not yet got to this point. He is concentrating so much on his own personal nomination that he is neglecting the problem of election in November. That may well depend on his decisions as to where he's going and who's going with him — the road taken and the road not taken, which, as Robert Frost pointed out, makes "all the difference." Reagan has yet to answer these questions in any memorable speech.

The most thoughtful leaders of the Republican Party are not in disagreement on this matter. They are trying to tell Reagan that he has won the nomination but that he is forgetting what goes beyond: that Jimmy Carter may be a "loser" as a president but that he is a formidable politician and debater, that the real "loser" in this election may be the man who thinks he can go it alone.

Open waterfront

The plans to destroy open spaces in Victoria's Inner Harbor by permitting residences, a hotel and a convention centre to be built on public waterfront property (Rainbow, Songhees, and Reid sites) are short sighted and a disservice to the present growing population and future generations.

Once built on, the waterfront will be lost virtually forever for public park use. Residences and hotels are needed, but there could and should be an over-all policy which would require that they be set back a distance of 200 feet from the waterfront or to the nearest road, whichever is the greatest distance.

These publicly-owned waterfront sites should be designated for public park use and be landscaped with grass, flowers and trees. If the city is made pleasant for its citizens, visitors will also want to come to see and enjoy Victoria. — B. E. Gibbens, 933 Convent Place.

Energy inefficient

Anyone who knows anything about transportation economics knows that water transport is cheap. It is cheaper than rail transport and far cheaper than transportation by car or truck. One reason for this is that vessels moving on water use less energy than other surface vehicles do.

Diesel engines used to propel ships are at least twice as efficient as gasoline engines in automobiles. Steel hulls sliding on water can be moved with a fraction of the fuel that rubber-tired vehicles running on asphalt or cement demand.

Then there is the matter of distance. A ferry system with alternate routes gives the user a choice. He can take the one involving the least mileage on land. A fixed link made up of tunnels and bridges, on the other hand, would force all traffic to use a single route. Result: more miles travelled if a fixed link is all that is available to those who wish to cross the Strait of Georgia.

Over-all it therefore appears that a fixed link between the Lower Mainland and Vancouver Island would be four or five times as energy demanding as a modern B.C. ferry fleet.

The consultants doing the $100,000 study of a fixed link for the provincial government should take these facts of life into account. — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

No help for retired

A few weeks ago an article appeared in your papers concerning the retroactive pay increase from 1975 to members of Royal Jubilee and Victoria General Hospital staffs amounting to $2,400. What was omitted to the public was that those who retired after 1975 do not receive anything (only if one left January, 1980), even though they paid their union dues during that period. They are members of many years standing and loyalties, yet staff who joined the hospitals as late as 1975 will get a substantial amount. It doesn't add up.

Many retirees are unaware of this rip-off. Those who have enquired are referred to the union only to be informed that someone else made the decision and that's how it stands, leaving those concerned bewildered and no one to appeal to. They have been stripped of their rights and the public should be aware of this disgraceful treatment. — Blanche Powell, 3974 Cedar Hill Cross Road.

Help for aged

A small increase in provincial and federal personal income tax deductions for retired persons over 70 is essential. These people rely on their hard-earned savings not merely for every-day living expenses, but cling to them through fear of the future, as they cannot tell when they will no longer be able to take full care of their premises. They would need some either occasional or permanent help which is rather expensive. It is impossible to foresee whether an illness or partial slowdown will last three days, three months or three years.

The assurance that a reasonable tax-free amount of money could be available to meet emergencies that are likely to occur will be a great help towards peace of mind and a welcome relief from depressing worries of uncertain future.

The present $1,000 interest deduction is not enough. It also destroys any incentive to save a little more, for if that little more is swallowed by taxes, one might as well spend the bit of surplus and then, if something does happen, rely on social assistance which would otherwise be neither welcome nor necessary.

No good citizen objects to taxation, for whether working or retired, he or she realizes that there are essential services such as police, firefighters, street cleaning, public transit, utilities to which individual contributions are a must.

But a little sense of security should be provided for those who have willingly and generously contributed their fair share for many years and are now carrying a burden which is too heavy, considering the real purchasing power of the dollar and the very high cost of goods and services. — E. I. Lattes, 432-200 Dallas Road.

Blackout:

Budget cuts cripple space program

By SARA TERRY
Christian Science Monitor

LOS ANGELES — Next year, the blackness of outer space will get a lot blacker — for those of us here on Earth, that is.

For nearly 20 years, pictures relayed by U.S. space probes have been flashing back to Earth dramatic shots of man's first walk on the moon, pictures of a rocky Martian landscape and photos of Jupiter's famed, swirling Red Spot.

But when Voyager II reaches Saturn in August 1981, two years after its encounter with Jupiter, it will signal a "last picture show" of sorts for a space-watching world. For there will ensue a long hiatus before scientists get another glimpse of the solar system from U.S. probes.

"Starting in 1963, there has never been more than 12 months when we have not been producing new images of new places," said Bruce Murray, director of the NASA Jet Propulsion Laboratory, which controls the country's unmanned space shots.

Caught in Washington's budget-cutting drive, the U.S. planetary exploration program, Murray said, is "on the ropes."

Recent space flights such as the Voyager and Viking missions to Jupiter and Mars, respectively, have been a part of a period of "unprecedented exploration," said the JPL director.

But they are the culmination of a slew of projects begun in the late 1960s — a continuous chain of events that was broken in the late 1970s when, for the first time in years, no new planetary exploration projects were funded.

Traditionally the U.S. Congress has been generous in funding the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which owns JPL and includes the laboratory in its budget. But the lion's share of recent NASA budgets has gone into the space shuttle program. The shuttle, which has suffered a two-year delay, was supposed to have been launched last year.

As a result, Murray said, JPL — which last year spent $250 million on flight projects — is down to its last two scheduled missions.

They are the Galileo flight to Jupiter, which originally was expected to arrive and start relaying pictures in 1984; and a joint American-European venture planned for 1983, which will send two spacecraft around the sun's poles.

Because both missions are to be launched from the space shuttle, they have been set back two years, to 1986 and 1985. And because of last-minute congressional budget-cutting, the so-called "solar polar" mission may yet be cut from JPL's agenda.

But planetary scientists such as Murray worry that the current political pressure to cut back spending may mean a loss of perspective on the long-range importance of planetary exploration. And they chafe over the fact that they have the knowledge and skills to develop technology to travel throughout the solar system. It is a tantalizing prospect that, because of a lack of money, dangles just out of their reach.

The impact of a decline in space exploration, Murray said, is twofold.

First, he said, a lack of new planetary projects will cause many scientists to leave the field for other areas, such as the booming defense industry — an exodus he said already has begun.

But more important, he said, there will be an intangible impact on the U.S. at large. It will be a loss of a feeling of "participation in the future, of leading the world in something positive, doing something with our technology that we can be proud of."

Murray acknowledged the earnestness of the national trend toward tightening purse strings. But he refuses to believe that Americans have lost their interest in planetary exploration.

"The problem is not that the American people have turned so inward that they no longer care. I think it's almost the reverse," he said. "They desperately yearn for somebody to tell them how to be great, how to have a future, how to do something they can be proud of."

The planetary program "is like the National Geographic in space," he said. "There's a basic interest in the United States, and in other countries as well, in exploration: What's the new frontier, what's it like out there, what's the next place? It is not well represented in a lobbying sense, but it's there, very strongly."

While Murray and other planetary scientists puzzle over how to spur that latent concern into vocal interest, he outlined these frontiers in space, which space scientists now are ready to tackle:

— A search for extraterrestrial intelligence. Although such a proposal has been turned down twice, JPL is trying for funding once again because, said Murray, "we have the technology now to do a million-fold better search than has ever been done before."

The seven-year project would involve a search through millions of radio frequencies across hundreds of light years for a signal being transmitted from somewhere in outer space.

Time is running out for such a mission, said Murray, because the increasing number of satellites being launched into Earth's orbit is creating "radio frequency pollution" that makes it almost impossible to "hear" any faint signals which might be picked up in space.

— An exploration of Venus. Because Venus, Earth's nearest neighbor, is covered by dense clouds, conventional space sensors have been unable to take pictures of the planet's surface. But with the help of newly developed "imaging radar," JPL scientists say they will be able to explore the hidden surface of the planet that has been called "Earth's twin." Such information, they claim, will prove invaluable in understanding Earth.

— A comet mission. Under a proposal now being written, a set of sensors would be launched in a probe directly into the center of Halley's Comet, providing data on a phenomenon that scientists know little about.

Egypt's camel corps takes on the bedouin hashish smugglers

By NICOLAS TATRO

ROMANI, Egypt — When Egypt's 3rd army was encircled by the Israelis in the Sinai desert during the 1973 Middle East war, food and supplies were smuggled through enemy lines by a corps of camels and elite trackers.

Now the unique cavalry force, which sources estimate to number more than 2,500 men, is being used to combat smuggling that has sprung up among desert nomads following the opening of borders between Egypt and Israel.

"There was virtually no smuggling in Sinai before we had peace because the army maintained tight control," Col. Mahmoud Singer explained to a reporter on a tour of the Romani camel corps post in the Sinai near the Mediterranean, about 150 kilometres northeast of Cairo.

After Egypt and Israel signed a peace treaty in March, 1979, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat returned the Sinai to civilian control and thousands of front-line soldiers were shifted to the volatile Libyan border area.

Some of the 120,000 bedouins living in the Sinai resumed an ancient nomad tradition: smuggling.

Televisions, tape recorders, fans, sheep and cotton sold at government regulated prices in Egypt began flowing north to Israel while tea, chocolate, beer and stolen cars came south to Egypt.

Hashish, a derivative of the hemp plant, is the prime target of the camel corps in Sinai. Sixty smugglers and 20 tons of hash have been seized since the new era of peace began — part of 87 smuggling arrests made in 1979 and 64 the year before, Egyptian officials said. More precise figures were unavailable.

Brig. Sayyed Abdel Rahman, a rugged six-footer who once led camel patrols himself, said most of the drugs were smuggled in at night by fishing boats and rubber dinghies.

"The bedouins meet the boats along the coast in Jeeps or with camels and head into the desert," he said. Western experts say the hashish originates in Lebanon, where civil strife makes policing impossible. The sources said a 600-ton crop is expected this year with much of it earmarked for Egypt's one million users who smoke it or chew it for the intoxicating effect.

Speed boats, helicopters and army Jeeps patrol the seacoast and inland routes, but in a country that is 96 per cent desert there is little chance of the corps being replaced.

"A jeep costs me $4,000 and can wear out in a year in this terrain," said Abdel Rahman. "A camel costs $400 and is good for at least seven years. Besides, you don't have to worry about maintenance or spare parts."

Camels can move swiftly and silently in waist-deep sand that is impassable for even four-wheel drive vehicles.

At a seacoast outpost eight kilometres from the base camp at Romani, 33-year-old Sgt. Mohammed Ali Koraim leads a five-man patrol with orders to fire on sight anyone who enters the restricted coastal zone.

"I grew up with camels," said Koraim, a 15-year veteran who grew up on a farm near the southern Egyptian city of Aswan. "My father was in the camel corps and I just followed the tradition.'

China's fate in the balance as modernization begins

By WILLIAM SEXTON

HEFEI, China — How do you persuade one billion people to work harder despite their grinding poverty? That, essentially, is Deng Xiaoping's chief task in the next two years if his modernization campaign is to take hold — and if he's to stay in power.

If Deng fails to mobilize the people behind his modernization campaign, China could well return to the doctrinaire socialism of Mao Tse-tung's days, another long span of xenophobic hostility toward the West, and perhaps even rapprochement with the doctrinaire marxists in Moscow.

Should he succeed, on the other hand, it's not inconceivable that the western world might one day find itself facing another Japan — one that is 10 times more populous and is rich in all the resources Japan lacks. Little wonder the Soviet Union cut off all aid to its neighbor 20 years ago.

Deng's regime will walk an economic as well as an ideological tightrope until his incentives prove they can stimulate the entire economy, not just the industrial sector, and can do so without producing catastrophic inflation. The signs of inflation are already visible, and Deng is under increasing pressure from conservative economists and old-line Marxists who question his borrowings from the capitalist book.

Greatly simplified, Deng's economic game plan runs like this: Raise the prices paid by government for agricultural products, thereby strengthening the ability of the vast rural market of 800 million persons to buy products manufactured in Chinese cities. Simultaneously, stimulate farm production by permitting peasants to sell the output of their private plots, which make up from 5 to 15 per cent of each commune's acreage, in a capitalist-style market. Meanwhile, boost investment in light industry, particularly textiles, which are in heavy demand in the countryside and are highly profitable to the state.

Deng counts on that locomotive force between countryside and industry to provide both the food and the capital for modernization. The trick is to fire the locomotive without overheating an already shaky economy.

Here, as in the rest of China, the question is whether agricultural output can be stimulated. Here are the grim facts with which Deng and his allies must contend:

China's Deng Xiaoping

● Despite all efforts to impose birth control, population is still growing at a full percentage point above the hoped-for rate last year. That means the country's farms will have an additional 200 million or more mouths to feed by the year 2000.

● Arable land is shrinking as cities expand and more of the countryside is opened up to coal mining, oil drilling, highways and railroads.

● Eighty per cent of the people must work farms to feed themselves and the urban residents, and the peasants labor from dawn to dusk. Neither the elasticity nor the money is available for the kind of production incentives that have won quick results in factories.

Yet the only hope for China's long-range stability, economic and political, lies with the peasants. They are the country's biggest resource, as well as its most significant market. Hence it is not unthinkable that Deng's entire program could be toppled by two or three years of bad weather and the bad crops that would result.

To stimulate output, the national government last year hiked the long-stable price paid communes for staple crops like rice and wheat by 25 per cent. Simultaneously, all cities reopened street-side "free markets" where farmers could sell directly to the public the output of their "private plots," the small strips of land too fragmented to be communally tilled economically.

And though foreign aid and investment can never be more than a drop in China's vast bucket of capital needs, the government opened the doors to American and European manufacturers of petrochemical fertilizer. The first big American contract went to Pullman-Kellogg Co. for seven fertilizer plants that are now in operation, and the fertilizer has dramatically increased farm yields. But there's not nearly enough to go around. Human waste remains the main fertilizer for most communes.

The people's commune, in which the land is pooled and farming is organized much the way work is in a factory, happens to be the only one of Mao Tse-tung's economic innovations that worked.

Despite the inherited Marxist penchant for egalitarianism, incentives have been a part of commune life since the start — except during the ultra-radical reign of Mao's widow, and the "Gang of Four."

Deng's challenge is first to build roads, then trucks to drive on them, then industry to equip the farms, then food to feed the factory workers, and, above all, money enough to satisfy the expectations of China's billion people, newly aroused by the highly publicized modernization campaign.

In the end, Chairman Mao's form of inspirational idealism was insufficient to the task. Deng's pragmatic innovations, say even his most optimistic supporters, may not be able to overcome all the obstacles in time.

Inflation — long restrained, along with the standard of living, by the traditional central planners — is already showing up in the prices of food and other goods. Authoritative sources also report a serious deficit developing in the national treasury. And the state council (cabinet) convened an extraordinary "national work conference on industry and transport" last week in Nanjing.

One source said that the deficits and inflation are attributed largely to the increased payments to farmers and industrial workers, which set off the traditional capitalist problem of too much money chasing too few goods. The remedial policy seems designed to soak up the increased earnings with the extra output of clothing and other consumer wares, while holding down manufacturing costs.

It seems certain that if Deng does succeed, his achievements in economic organization will rank in history with those of Mao.

Katharine Whitehorn

The British Royal Family has always had an open mind about doctors — Queen Mary went in for homeopathy, and in 1722 the children of Princess Caroline were among the first in England to try the new vaccination against smallpox.

Mind you, it's understandable, since Royals are naturally offered the most eminent, venerable and therefore old-fashioned of all the conventional doctors. But it's good to know the tradition hasn't died away.

Prince Philip, who often gives little all-male dinners at the Palace to people representing some special interest, recently held one (with Angus Ogilvy, Princess Alexandra's husband) for a fascinating bunch of people I can only describe as Fringe.

There was Lyall Watson, whose Supernature brought much of the mysterious and inexplicable stuff that scientists won't look at under respectable scrutiny; Martin Israel, who's supposed to be an exorcist; Brian Inglis, who practically invented the study of fringe medicine in Britain and has a book Natural and Supernatural in paperback.

And there was Michael Manning, who goes around shifting infra-red rays by the laying-on of hands — someone did this 50 years ago, I understand, but the scientists just said that, as it plainly couldn't happen, it hadn't happened — a point of view alive and well and living in London.

It was represented at the dinner by Lord (Solly) Zuckerman, the zoologist; he kept saying, "We scientists have open minds" — which brought a big laugh all round.

It's intriguing that there is in Britain at the moment — and indeed in the world — this snowballing interest in all those things which have been considered outside the realm of science; in the occult, and telepathy; in spoon-bending and dreams; in all sorts of fringe medicine, whether it's the acupuncture of the Chinese, or osteopathy, or chiropractice, or faith-healing. And I think it's due to two things.

First, I'm sure, it's simply because orthodox medicine has done so well and gone so far. So many of the old killers have been routed by drugs and surgery (rheumatic fever, smallpox, malaria, diphtheria) that we are left face to face only with the diseases about which the big question is not just "How do we cure them?" but "Why do we get them?" — cancer and heart disease, mental illness and nervous troubles like anorexia. And there don't seem to be any easy answers.

Last year Bernard Dixon, editor of the London New Scientist, got out a book called Beyond the Magic Bullet, in which he pointed out that doctors were returning (too darned slowly, of course, but it's a start) to wondering what makes the body whole: to the Greek idea of balance.

They are wondering what strengthens the body's own defences and makes it able to cope, rather than simply using it as a passageway in which they pursue an individual disease with an individual drug — the "magic bullet" of the title. And a book out this month, Patients and their Doctors by Glin Bennett, makes some of the same points: that the art of curing has a lot to do with what goes on in the patient's mind and soul as well as which knife slices into which diseased part.

But there is something more even than this: of which the most astonishing sign was undoubtedly the mass suicide in Guyana of the crazed followers of the Reverend Jim Jones. No one, to my mind, has paid enough attention to the significance of that ghastly event. If 900 people will not only commit suicide but force their children to drink cyanide, what astonishing force is it that's at work? What's got into people that they behave like that?

Why are there so many cults and groups and seekings flourishing around the world? Why, come to that, does a country like Iran suddenly go overboard for the Muslim religion?

The West has it that it's all to do with economics: the Eastern bloc insists it's a veiled uprising of the proletariat or whatever; but the upsurge is far more fundamental and emotional than that.

It looks to me as if half of the world has been told for the last century to behave rationally; and that the impulses, whatever they are, which orthodox religion used to take care of have been suppressed — and are now bubbling up again.

I believe there's a vast hunger in people to have their irrational side acknowledged; for a recognition of the urges and impulses and dramas and feelings that drift like tides swayed by the dark side of the moon. A diet of rock-hard facts and stern proof and injunctions to believe nothing that cannot be repeated in the laboratory (coupled, I dare say, with a spot of healthy scepticism about what is done in the laboratory) has left out half of what the human being needs to stay sane.

I don't suppose that Prince Philip and Angus Ogilvy went away from that dinner resolved to try their minds at bending spoons, or that next time they feel ill they'll ring for the witch-doctor instead of the surgeon.

But maybe they, too, are recognizing that people are moving in strange new directions these days. And that science had better keep an open door on the unsolved and the irrational; or it will find that people are not knocking on its closed door any more, but have left it to the ivy and the cobwebs.

'80 to be worst year for housing

TORONTO (CP) — The housing industry will be hit in 1980 with the worst of four bad years that began in 1976, says Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

Even though interest rates have begun falling and housing starts recovered slightly in April, the federal housing agency says it expects only about 185,000 housing starts this year. One industry official says only 135,000 homes will be built.

In 1979, the most pessimistic economists predicted the housing market would bottom out that year with about 200,000 starts.

The Conference Board in Canada says it expects mortgage rates to remain high, above 14 per cent this year and higher than 13 per cent in 1981.

Japanese have few labor problems

TOKYO (CP) — When Japanese labor unions go on strike, they rarely have to worry about back-to-work legislation.

That's not because politicians are too timid to pass such laws. It's because the strikes are usually over before anyone has time to draft such measures.

On occasion, Japanese union officials will declare a strike — which will consist of a few members carrying protest signs outside the plant where their fellow-workers continue production.

Behind the co-operative labor-management relationship in this country of 115 million people lies a seemingly firm consensus envied by many Western business and political leaders.

Part of that consensus is a solid commitment to making productivity grow faster than production costs, including wages. Japanese economists say that differential suppresses inflation and gives pay increases more real purchasing power.

Even in this year's controversial "shunto," the annual spring offensive of organized labor, the difference between management and union proposals was measured in tenths of percentage points.

Over-all pay increases, including bonuses, for the pace-setting transportation unions came to slightly over seven per cent, about two percentage points above expected inflation rates.

The 1980 shunto included a national transportation strike, but in characteristic fashion the Japanese unions limited it to three days, during which specific transport services were to be halted for two days each.

Advance announcements of which services would stop and when gave commuters time to plan adjustments.

Commuters from distant suburbs of Tokyo generally took suitcases of clothing to work with them, preferring to sleep in hotels or their offices rather than miss a day's work.

At the Keidanren, an organization representing the biggest of Japanese big business, the economic advantages of such comparative labor stability are keenly appreciated.

"You North American and European people have much more interest in income distribution, while we Japanese people are more interested in expanding the economy, said Keidanren official Hyuko Wada.

Workers, however, are not the only ones who are supposed to feel an obligation to the national economy.

Corporations are expected to provide lifetime employment and generous fringe benefits to their staff, accepting responsibility to provide help in everything from sports facilities to finding spouses.

During a recent economic slack period, analysts estimated that Japanese industry was continuing to employ two million people who, by North American standards probably would have been laid off until demand recovered.

But the Japanese labor stability is attributed to many factors in addition to that sense of mutual responsibility.

Petro-Canada to build office

CALGARY (CP) — Petro-Canada has announced a $200-million office development in downtown Calgary where its permanent headquarters will be located.

The federal company has been renting office space at scattered locations since it was established four years ago.

Bob Foulkes, Petro-Canada spokesman, said the project will have two towers, one with 50 storeys and the other with 24. The towers will have a total office space of 148,640 square metres (1.6 million square feet). Petro-Canada will use 83,610 square metres and the remainder will be leased.

Foulkes said Petro-Canada is a 50-per-cent partner in the project with Arci Ltd. of Calgary. The Webb Zerafa Menkes Housden partnership of Toronto and Christopher Ballyn of Calgary have been selected as architects.

Construction will begin in six to seven months with the smaller tower to be completed by the end of 1982 and the other by the end of 1983.

Foulkes said Petro-Canada will name the project.

Canada needs processed exports

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (CP) — Canadians are concerned about the structure of trade between Canada and the United States, says the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association.

Exports from the U.S. to Canada tend to be highly-manufactured products, involving more jobs and technology than Canadian exports to the United States, John Bulman said in a speech prepared for delivery to the U.S. National Association of Manufacturers.

He said the issue is particularly sensitive with regard to automotive trade.

Sales of imported automobiles have jumped sharply in recent months, and "I would much rather see a concerted effort by governments, companies and unions on both sides of the border to ensure that the automobile industry competes successfully in the fiercely-competitive battles of the 1980s."

U.S. and Canadian manufacturers are concerned that the balance of payments problems not lead to the imposition of arbitrary controls on domestic and international flows of trade and funds, Bulman said.

"Such policies can only lead to further and more serious difficulties and more unemployment."

Syncrude approves upgrade

FORT MCMURRAY (CP) — Syncrude Canada Ltd. has approved a $40-million capital expenditure to upgrade its hot bitumen storage tank farm.

Four extra tanks would double the existing storage capacity for a total of about 4.48 million barrels of bitumen. They would be used in the event ofshutdowns of the plant's coker systems.

North American Ltd. and Toronto Iron Works Ltd. have been contracted to construct the tanks which are expected to be in operation by mid-1981.

British unions' Day of Action a gigantic flop

By SHERRI BARRON

LONDON (CP) — The urge to gloat now may seem irresistible to British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government.

In shop-floor language, the Day of Action organized by the Trades Union Congress has been one gigantic "cock-up." In other words, what was meant to be a show of strength and dissatisfaction with a wide range of social and economic government policies more closely resembled a parade of impotence.

TUC General Secretary Len Murray had wanted to stop everything today to protest Thatcher's rigid monetary strategy — a strategy that has pushed inflation beyond 20 per cent and the level of unemployment to almost seven per cent.

The TUC, representing 12 million trade unionists, is considered the strongest and best organized trade union movement in the world.

Only by rallying railwaymen and London transport workers could strike organizers hope to involve the largest number of people.

But the call for a one-day strike was ignored or defied on a much bigger scale than union leaders expected. Few unions committed their members to all-out support, and an opinion poll conducted by Marplan for the BBC showed 73 per cent of trade unionists against the strike and 84 per cent said they planned to turn up for work.

London Transport, which employs 65,000 workers, said its subway system ran "much to normal" and 75 per cent of buses operated regular service.

Although there were huge regional variations in services today, a spokesman estimated close to 75 per cent of British Rail's 180,000 employees clocked in for their regular shift.

The national press was silenced today by striking print unions but Tuesday's papers were thick with editorials criticizing, as one noted a "token political strike" that would achieve nothing save a loss to the country's gross national product of an estimated £500 million ($1.25 billion Canadian).

Some observers believe that far from forcing the government to more closely heed the TUC's views, the Day of Action has only further divided the unions and increased government scorn.

Many employees will lose a day's pay, some gladly, but others reluctantly as the result of considerable union pressure. Puttering in the garden was more inviting than the wrath of a shop steward towards those who decided not to strike.

Much of the chagrin of strike organizers, today was a warm, sunny day. Thousands walked or cycled to work. Emergency auto parking was offered in parks. Essential staff stayed in hotels or set up camp beds in offices. Car pools were arranged and companies had special buses pick up employees living in the suburbs.

Denis Healey, Labor party financial critic, admitted the TUC protest would have little effect on Conservative government policy but he said it was necessary to allow union members to "let off steam."

Apart from south Wales where 27,000 striking miners displayed the most decisive support of any union, most services operated almost normally.

The unions did not bring the nation to its knees and that fact could woo support for a prime minister who was swept into office on a promise to tame the unions.

Saudis raising oil price by $2

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Apparently caught by surprise, the United States today criticized as unfortunate Saudi Arabia's decision to raise the price of its benchmark crude oil by $2 to $28 a barrel.

"We believe that a price increase at the present time is unfortunate given the current soft conditions in international oil markets," said State Department spokesman Thomas Reston.

He doubted that the Saudi decision was taken in retaliation to the film Death of a Princess, whose showing on U.S. public television this week was strongly opposed by the Saudi government.

"I would say that we at this point have no reason to believe that could have been involved," Reston said.

Reston told reporters, "We have appreciated the restraint Saudi Arabia has shown in its role as a price moderator."

But, he added, "However justifable it might be for Saudi Arabia to desire to reduce differentials in prices charged by OPEC countries for similar qualities of oil, this particular increase would in no way — in our judgment — justify any price increase."

Kalamazoo gets clobbered

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — Downtown Kalamazoo looked like a "ghost town" today after several deadly tornadoes ripped through the city and outlying areas, killing five people and causing $40 million in damage.

Two tornadoes hit this city of 90,000 at rush hour Tuesday and other twisters roared through four adjacent townships leaving 81 people injured and 1,200 people homeless.

"It looks like a ghost town," said Gov. William Milliken. He declared a state of emergency in the area and ordered in state troopers to help restore order. "It reminds me of a bombed-out city.

Eighty-one persons were injured, according to spokesmen at two hospitals in the city. Six were admitted to Bronson Methodist Hospital, including two in serious condition.

The twister that hit Kalamazoo's downtown business district about 4 p.m. local time wrecked the city's 22-year-old pedestrian mall. The top of the 10-storey Industrial State Bank was ripped off and virtually every window broken. Two women were killed when winds blew off the entire back wall of the seven-storey Gilmore's department store.

One woman died inside a laundromat a half mile from the downtown area when a wall collapsed on her.

Ten other persons inside the laundry escaped serious injury.

Mari Gilman, 31, who had just been married Saturday, was in the laundromat with a friend, Susan Muszynski, 26.

"She went outside, she saw the storm coming and we saw the look on her face," Muszynski said. "She grabbed her dog out of the car and ran to a gully beside the laundromat for safety. We saw the building fall on her."

About 1,000 homes were damaged in Kalamazoo, police said. In one of the hardest-hit residential areas about 60 homes were destroyed and 500 others damaged. In nearby townships 280 homes were hit, leaving 14 injured and about 250 homeless.

"It happened so fast, you hardly had time to collect your thoughts or prayers," said the Rev. Lewis Briner.

Clifford Smith said he tried to turn his car around and escape when he saw a funnel cloud about half a block away.

"The next thing I knew, I was gone," Smith said. "I could feel it lift up the car."

Smith's airborne auto was slammed against the side of the federal building, but he escaped uninjured.

The Kalamazoo twisters followed by one day tornadoes in Missouri and Pennsylvania that did millions of dollars worth of damage. In Missouri, 33 people were hurt, most of them in Sedalia, where the mayor estimated damage at $45 million to $49 million.

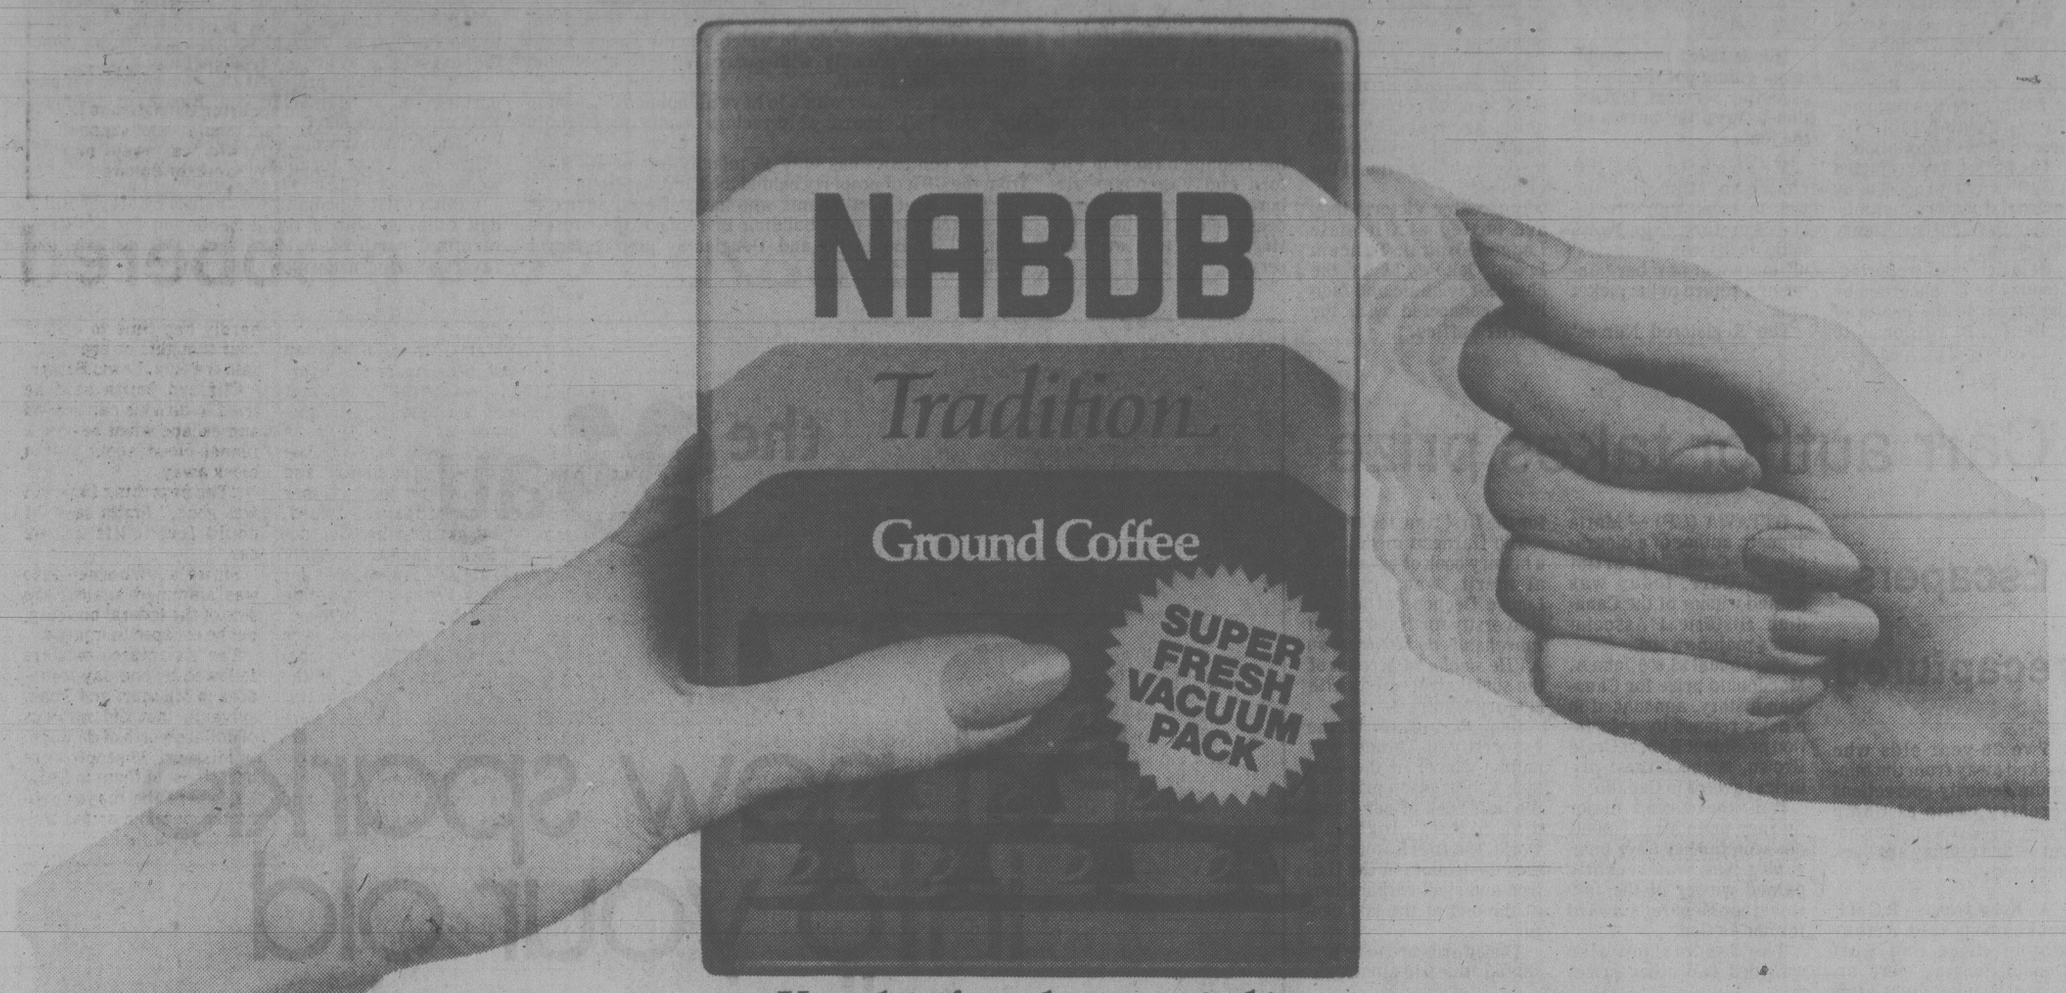
IT'S HARD. TO BE FRESH.



Knock it if you haven't tried it.

You can smell the coffee inside, on the outside. And that's bad.

Nothing gets in, nothing gets out.

But the second you snip open Nabob's vacuum seal, you'll hear a whoosh. The sound of freshness.

Watch our hard pack become soft. Smell our glorious fresh aroma.

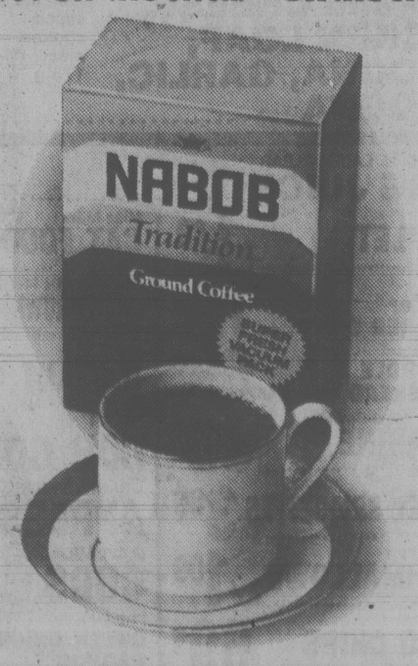
Now we get Nabob's great flavour to you even fresher than before.

Then you'll smell something marvellous. Nabob's famous fresh aroma. And what an aroma. It comes from a truly superior blend of coffee with a flavour that has made Nabob the number one ground coffee in Western Canada. For 80 years.

If you want a really great cup of fresh coffee, knock Nabob. Then try it.

We guarantee that our fresh flavour will come out in your cup. Not on the shelf.

Nabob's freshness comes out in your cup, not on the shelf.



Tough stand hinted to stop nurse strike

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich has hinted he will not stand by and watch 2,700 government-employed nurses go on strike.

The nurses threaten a renewed walkout Friday unless the Government Employee Relations Bureau (GERB) agrees to return to the bargaining table for new contract negotiations.

The nurses have rejected a settlement proposed by industrial inquiry commissioner Mr. Justice Henry Hutcheon.

Heinrich told reporters Monday he is concerned by the threat to the health of patients. In response to questions he stated:

"I think we'll leave any comments with respect to legislation, orders-in-council or designations alone for a little while."

This is taken to mean he is not ruling out the use of essential services legislation to keep the nurses on the job.

Meanwhile, GERB chairman Mike Davison was to meet with Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe today to discuss the nurses' ultimatum of new bargaining or a return to the picket line.

The Registered Nurses' Association of B.C. has indicated an all-out strike can be expected this time instead of the rotating strikes that were carried out last month without picketing or interruption of essential services.

The government nurses staff about 20 public health units, six mental health hospitals and various other medical outlets around the province.

In Greater Victoria they are posted at Glendale Lodge Hospital, Tillicum Lodge, Oak Bay Lodge, the chest x-ray clinic and facilities connected with the sheriff's office.

One hearing remains for Convair

A decision on the Convair Coach Lines Ltd. appeal to keep its bus route between Victoria and Vancouver is awaiting a final day of hearing by the B.C. Motor Carrier Commission.

After the final hearing scheduled Monday in Vancouver the commission is expected to release its decision within a few weeks.

The bus company was told to halt the bus service it was operating between the Dominion Hotel in Victora and Vancouver airport. At that point the license holder for the route, Hustle Bus, took over the service.

New site is busline choice

The decision on a new Victoria bus depot is up to Pacific Coach Lines, although provincial government expects the Crown corporation to take advice from municipal bodies and agencies.

A spokesman for Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Tuesday the minister has asked government agencies, civic bodies and bus companies to provide by May 31 their firm and final proposals on where a new downtown bus depot should be located.

A ministry spokesman said there is no firm deadline on finding property to which Pacific Coach Lines can relocate, possibly with space for city buses and tour operators as well.

But the minister wants to have all opinions in soon to give the PCL board of directors some direction in making a decision.

The company has only 14 months left on its lease from the CPR of property behind the Empress Hotel.

The list of participants who have offered advice in the search for a new building to replace the present terminal at Belleville and Douglas is getting longer by the week.

It includes the four core municipalities, the Urban Transit Authority, the Capital Regional District and Metro Transit Operating Co. (formerly B.C. Hydro bus division).

The spokesman said PCL would probably want to "touch base" with Vander Zalm and the provincial cabinet, but the company itself would probably decide where to relocate.

B.C. Buildings Corp., the government agency which administers Crown land and government buildings, would have to be brought into the picture as some of the suggested sites are government property.

PCL last year proposed the government employee parking lot at Humboldt and Blanshard behind the Executive House hotel.

The UTA last week released a study which agreed, suggesting a new terminal near the existing site which would connect PCL, city transit and tour buses.

But a CRD subcommittee chaired by Mayor Bill Tindall followed with a recommendation for a PCL-only terminal north of Yates Street. Metro Transit also favors a northern downtown location.

Carr author takes prize

OTTAWA (CP) — Maria Tippett, author of a biography of Canadian artist Emily Carr, today was named winner of the Canadian Historical Association's major award.

The annual $5,000 John A. Macdonald prize for Canadian history, announced in a news release by association president Robert Craig Brown, is the largest historical award in Canada.

It is the second major literary prize Mrs. Tippett has won for her Carr biography. She was recently named winner of the 1979 Governor-General's award for non-fiction.

The association also awarded two other prizes for the first time today.

The Garneau medal, for a history book of exceptional merit, was given to Louise Dechene of McGill University for Habitants et marchands de Montreal au XVIIe siecle, an account of the social structure in 17th century Montreal.

John N. Ingham of the University of Toronto was named winner of the Wallace K. Ferguson prize for the best book of non-Canadian history. Ingham's work, The Iron Barons, studies the leaders of the U.S. iron and steel corporations at the end of the last century.

The awards are to be presented June 6 in Montreal.

Escapers recaptured

Two 20-year-olds who walked away from the minimum security corrections forestry camp at Camp Point on northern Vancouver Island Sunday are back in custody.

A Kamloops RCMP spokesman said Arthur Wayne Price and Kurt Donald Sonntag were arrested Monday night after a hitchhiker reported he had been robbed by two men in a truck west of Kamloops.

Harry Bacon, acting director of the Vancouver Island Regional Corrections Centre, said the escape was apparently made in a vehicle which was reported missing Sunday from the camp, about 10 kilometres south of Kelsey Bay.

WEARING WINGS and an angelic smile is not the normal doings of a busy three-year-old but Carter, son of Richard and Kathy Niddrie, 2773 Kingswood, gave it a good try when the family visited Beacon Hill Park to feed the birds. At least one of his feathered friends thought enough of the idea to forget the handout for a while and become airborne behind Carter's back.

Rainbow project raises protest

Victoria West residents Tuesday night again demonstrated their opposition to rezoning the old Rainbow property on the harbor for a housing development.

Ten people spoke at the public meeting of the Advisory Planning Commission and all but one opposed city council's plan to put housing on 1.7 acres of the three-acre site and to use the remainder for a scenic drive and park.

The Vic West residents — some of them also appeared at city council last week and spoke against the plan — wanted the entire site reserved for green space.

Michael Muirhead of 2049 Saltaire Place said he was the fourth generation of his family to have lived on Robert Street near the property and urged that it be kept for a park.

He was a former Rainbow Sea Cadet when the Navy League of Canada used the site for its cadet program. It was sold to the city in 1974 for $320,000.

"The Rainbow site is fairly sacred property. It's an historic area," he said.

Muirhead added that if it could be kept as a park, it would relate to the lives of many people in the Victoria area — the hundreds of people who were sea cadets, for example — who may not live in the immediate neighborhood anymore.

Grant Keddie, president of the Victoria West Community Development Association, said at one time there used to be 15 archaeological sites along the Esquimalt-Vic West waterfront but all but the Rainbow site have been destroyed and built upon.

The Coffin Islands just offshore are an old Indian burial ground, Keddie said. He said the Rainbow site now gets heavy use from neighborhood children, and if less than an acre were kept as green space it would put pressure on the fragile archaeological remains on the little islands.

Norman Pearson, who is restoring a heritage house at Seaforth and Robert streets, said it was ironic that city council wants to rezone the property upwards for townhouses when only last year it was downzoned to single family dwellings, after several years pressure by Vic West residents.

Some residents claimed the site had been earmarked from the beginning for a park, but Ald. Bill McElroy told them council in 1976 endorsed a half and half plan for housing and green space.

But he admitted that the city bought the parcel in part to block several developers' plans for high density apartments.

Gerry Chaster of 520 Selkirk said that as chairman of the Victoria Horticultural Society's heritage tree project he wanted to see the "really fantastic trees on that site" preserved.

If construction and blasting goes ahead on the property, it will mean almost certainly that the oaks and arbutus on the Rainbow property will die.

Jim Lee of 223 Robert Street said the property is needed as a park because of all the apartments in the district and the large numbers of children.

"It seems so crazy to build houses there when the need is for green space."

Developer Pat Weymss was the only one in favor of putting housing on part of the site. He said if council votes to go ahead with its plan, then his company would make an offer to develop the property.

The APC will vote Thursday night on the city's rezoning proposal. It is only an advisory body and its recommendations are not binding on council.

But workers over at the Dana Farm Soap Factory on Salt Spring Island say it will all come out in the wash

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Goat milk is for drinking, right? Definitely.

But while those extra items have been developed at the Dana Farm Soap Factory on Salt Spring Island, the company is limiting itself to shampoo for the time being. If all goes well the novel product should be on sale in city health food and organic product stores this week.

The little firm isn't exactly ready to tackle Clairol or Johnson & Johnson for a big slice of the shampoo market. In fact, a roaring success would probably dismay the company's principals who consider quality of life at least as important as success.

The product is already doing well in Vancouver, the Cowichan Valley and on Salt Spring, where anything to do with goats strikes most islanders as the most natural thing in the world.

How the folks at Dana Farm got into the soap business may not rank with Henry Ford deciding to mass produce cars but it's an intriguing insight into how a cottage industry can be established.

Jim Scott used to be chief editor of J.J. Douglas (now Douglas and McIntyre Ltd.), a Vancouver book publishing firm. He managed a book store in Ganges for awhile and then, about a year ago, he took the plunge — right into the deep and dangerous waters of full-time farming.

Scott wanted to start a goat cheese operation but health department rules and capital costs postponed that dream.

Raw milk, a few chickens, ducks and goat kids accounted for the past year's income.

When a new couple moved in to manage the YWCA's Yawaca Outdoor Centre next door, Scott invited his new neighbors over for dinner, partly because he's neighborly but also because he wanted to ask the new managers to keep camp visitors off the farm.

The farm family met Tom and Diane Stokes and hit it off instantly. Scott relaxed and began talking about goats, his favorite subject. He has 42 at the moment, 18 in milk.

Scott had spoken to some goat breeders in Oregon City who gave up a milk route to produce a line of goat milk cosmetics. He mentioned to the Stokes he wished he knew a chemist who could come up with workable formulas for a similar product line.

Diane began to laugh and Tom got red in the face.

"I'm a biochemist," Stokes said.

Scott supplied the milk and Stokes, when he wasn't organizing a camp activity, did research with goat milk.

A Richmond native, Stokes had attended school in Texas and did research at the University of Colorado before joining Mountain High, a Boulder firm run by Canadians producing ice cream and yogurt.

He moved back to Canada and a Coast Guard stint before moving to Salt Spring.

One of the first results of Tom's goat milk research was a good soap but making it was labor intensive and it wasn't the right product to start with.

Then, a little more than a month ago, 10 months after he tackled his first gallon of goat milk, Stokes raced over to Dana Farm.

"I've got it," he yelled.

Stokes says goat milk contains many of the ingredients found only in the most expensive shampoos.

As the blurb on the bottle says: "Goat milk has been used since the time of Cleopatra in hair and body care lotions."

The listed ingredients are undiluted goat milk, sodium lauryl sulphate (derived from coconut oil) and lavender flower oil.

Feedback from users has been positive and the five principals of the semi-formal company all want it to succeed . . . within reason, of course.

What's their production schedule?

"Well, we were going to mix up a batch last night but these friends dropped over," Stokes said. "Maybe tonight."

Now that's Salt Spring enterprise as it was meant to be.

WCB okays ferry

The Workers' Compensation Board today cleared the way for the sailing of the Victoria Princess on her inaugural Seattle-Victoria run Friday.

A final WCB inspection of asbestos contamination on the vessel, the former Queen of Prince Rupert, undertaken Tuesday has revealed levels of free asbestos are within compliance levels of WCB regulations.

The WCB rushed to complete the tests at its lab in Vancouver overnight.

Normally the tests take a week or more to complete.

"We're satisfied the vessel is safe for crew and passengers," a WCB spokesman said today.

Public inquiry urged into Saanich shooting

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A Vancouver lawyer has written to Attorney-General Allan Williams suggesting a public inquiry be held into a 1978 shooting in Saanich that wounded a veteran police officer and notorious prison escaper.

In his 1½-page letter, Craig Paterson said the escaper, Thomas Lackey, told him from his hospital bed just hours after the incident that he had been deliberately shot in the head by a police officer after he had given himself up.

However, the Saanich police board has released a statement on the incident prepared by Police Chief Robert Peterson and tabled at the board meeting on Monday.

The statement says a debriefing session exonerated the police officers of any wrongdoing.

The statement arose in response to a recent publication in the Times of the board's refusal to release the gunshot report required under the firearms regulations of the Police Act in cases where there are injuries or deaths.

The report was made to the police board chairman Mayor Mel Couvelier on Feb. 8, 1979, but has still not been made public.

Allegations of deliberate shooting were made by defence counsel David Gibbons during Lackey's trial last December in which Lackey was convicted of a series of crimes including the attempted murder of Sgt. William Hillcoat in the Nov. 8, 1978 shoot-out at McKenzie and Cedar Hill Cross Road.

But Peterson said a three-hour debriefing session Feb. 7, 1980, completely exonerated Hillcoat and Constable Robert Love of any wrongdoing.

Love arrived minutes after the shoot-out and had Lackey by the hair with his revolver pointed at the right side of Lackey's head when Hillcoat stumbled into them causing Love's gun to discharge.

But Peterson rejected that theory. He said if it was an attempted execution the officers wouldn't have missed. He felt also it would have been impossible for Lackey's head wounds to be caused by Love's gun discharging because of Love's position holding the man.

The chief concluded Lackey's facial wounds occurred when one of the four shots fired by Hillcoat in the exchange of gunfire struck a solid object, fragmented and imbedded in Lackey's forehead and eye.

Paterson, who represented Lackey in an unrelated civil matter prior to the shooting incident, said in an interview Tuesday he felt there were sufficient grounds to warrant an inquiry based on the comments Lackey made to him and other evidence brought up in the trial.

Lackey was sentenced to 18 years in prison and is currently at the regional psychiatric centre near Abbotsford undergoing treatment for injuries received in the gun battle.

Hillcoat received a shotgun blast in the stomach and thighs and, while he has since returned to work, still has 36 shotgun pellets in his body.

Peterson said a formal inquiry was never held into the allegations because no complaint had been lodged.

But lawyer Paterson said the reason for that was simply Lackey's lack of knowledge of the complaint procedure.

Paterson said Lackey, an American citizen, had assumed the crown would launch an inquiry into the allegations and hadn't realized he himself would have to initiate the action.

"He's rather cynical anything would be done."

Paterson said he has now asked Williams if any complaints or requests for information on the complaint procedure have been made to the government in connection with the case.

Paterson is not alone in suggesting there should be an inquiry.

Defence lawyer Gibbons has supported such a move and so has Dr. Michael Jackson, professor of criminal law and prisoners' rights at the University of Victoria.

He said he was appalled at Peterson's suggestion that a ricochet or fragmented bullet caused Lackey's facial wounds.

If that was the case then why wasn't the evidence given in court? he wondered.

"It's outrageous now for the police force to come up with a different conclusion as to what happened," he said.

Ganges sewer petition to get second probe

The RCMP will investigate a second time to find out whether a petition supporting a sewer development in Ganges on Salt Spring Island was padded.

Assistant deputy attorney-general Neil McDiarmid confirmed today the new investigation was ordered after Yvette Valcourt, Salt Spring Island director on the Capital Regional District, had approached his department with information she claims proves the petition had been padded with the names of ineligible people.

Previously, Valcourt had also met with Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

A spokesman for the RCMP detachment in Ganges said the original investigation had ended with insufficient evidence to lay any charges.

Valcourt has accused CRD executive director Dennis Young of illegally certifying the petition, which she says was used in 1977 to prove the need for a sewer.

But Young says the petition was never used as a basis for deciding in favor of construction.

He says he "certified it quite properly, believing it to be an accurate petition."

He says the CRD did not act on the petition because of complaints received about its value. The regional district, he says, did not take action until the regional health officer Dr. Allen Arneil warned in a report a sewer system was needed.

The $4.1-million system is needed, Young says, to replace malfunctioning septic tanks and allow the school and hospital to operate properly.

A municipal affairs spokesman confirmed the petition had no direct bearing on the decision to go ahead with the sewer. He said, however, the allegations by Valcourt had to be investigated and her material had been passed to the RCMP by the attorney-general's department.

Planning for the sewer is continuing, he added.

Valcourt claims that pensioners and others on fixed incomes may lose their homes if forced to pay for the sewer system but Young says many island residents will be helped by government homeowner grants. Those generally wanting more development on the island are small business people who, in some cases, have lived on the island for generations.

A new sewer system could pave the way for more development in the downtown core.

Mechanics vote strike

About 180 car mechanics and body shop workers in Victoria have voted 97 per cent in favor of strike action — but negotiations are continuing.

"We are making good progress at the present time," said Art Glass, spokesman for the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the union negotiating with seven companies represented by the Automotive Employers Association of Victoria.

No appeal

Rose Manor has not appealed an arbitration pay award to its employees, a company spokesman said today.

The personal-care home has sought legal advice on some wording in the binding award but is not disputing the pay scales, board president Winifred Wardman said.

Vic West full of beans?

By NORMAN GIDNEY

It sounds like a low-budget science fiction film — the bean sprouts that invaded Victoria West.

That's the plan of Chinese restaurant owner Spencer Kong, if he can get city approval for a commercial bean sprout operation at 511 William.

Kong, of the Jade Palace restaurant in Market Square, made the proposal to the Advisory Planning Commission on Tuesday night.

The audience and Kong himself found it hard not to laugh while the restaurateur outlined his request for rezoning from single family to commercial for his crop.

"It doesn't make any noise. It doesn't bother anybody. It just grows by itself."

The sprouts are grown in big tanks, sometimes bathtubs, in a warm humid atmosphere. Water is sloshed over the beans and changed every few hours around the clock. In two days they're ready to eat.

Kong said it's the coming thing in Victoria. There's a big potential local market.

Advice from public sought on centre

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Designers, performers, trade union officials, international experts — the people planning Victoria's convention centre, want your help.

Ken Stratford, consultant to the Pan-Pacific Conference and Trade Centre Society, said Tuesday the organization is looking for Victorians with special skills to advise how the centre should be used.

"There are people in the community who have a tremendous amount of skills. Some of them are retired. Some are semi-retired," he said.

STRATFORD . . . special skills needed

The Pan-Pacific group would like to meet them. It proposes a number of task forces headed by these knowledgable individuals to provide expert advice to the board which will manage and operate the $8 million convention centre.

Some of the experts would be named to the nine-member management board itself.

Stratford listed a number of areas the Pan-Pacific group would like to hear from:

International affairs — someone with knowledge of other countries. "They've been around a bit globally . . . A skilled type who may have been an international negotiator." Perhaps a former United Nations official.

Performing arts — an individual familjar with drama, music, opera and the like to suggest cultural uses for the convention centre, such as noon concerts.

Design — the Pan Pacific group wants a special Victoria flavor to permeate the centre so visitors will get a strong impression of the city's identity. They want help in designing the "street furniture," banners and decorations and ideas for adding ethnic elements when international conferences are convened here.

Labor — "we want somebody to represent labor because a big market today is national and international labor conferences."

Transportation — it's one of the major constraints on the size of convention the centre can attract, so the Pan-Pacific group will need someone who is expert in the field.

Publicity — the organizers at this stage need to get the word out. They want someone who will be a liaison with local groups, who can get them to tell their national and international affiliated organizations that Victoria is in the convention business.

"This will not just be a show thing. They'll have real policy-making power," says Stratford.

Lot filled in

The rocky bluff at Fairfield and Linden, vacant since the old Alkazar mansions was demolished several years ago, will be built on again.

Concord Credits Ltd. has taken out a building permit at city hall for a $1 million 16-unit condominium project. It will have five storeys and a penthouse.

Island Farms Dairy is also undertaking a major expansion at its city plant. The farmer's co-op has taken out a building permit worth $150,000 for an addition to its cooler on Dowler Place.

Boer vet dies at 100

Capt. Claude Ivor Mackenzie, one of the last survivors of both the Boer War and the First World War, died here Tuesday at the age of 100.

Mackenzie, who lived at the Memorial Pavilion, had been a member of the Victoria Golf Club for 45 years.

He was born July 29, 1879, in Cork, Ireland. In 1899 at the age of 19 he joined the 3rd East Yorkshire Regiment and left for the Boer War in South Africa.

Potvin makes up for earlier blunder

PHILADELPHIA (CP) — Dennis Potvin came from nowhere and brought New York Islanders with him Tuesday night.

The team captain swept from his right defence position toward Philadelphia Flyers' goaltender Pete Peeters, screaming to be recognized. He was, and the underdog Islanders hope to gain the same results collectively, by the time the Stanley Cup winner is decided.

Potvin's second goal of the game, on the power play at 4:07 of overtime, lifted the Islanders, fifth in over-all standings at the end of the regular season, to a 4-3 victory over the National Hockey League champion Flyers and injected considerable interest into a best-of-seven series that many have said is tilted heavily towards Philadelphia.

"Bobby Nystrom was behind the net fighting along the boards for the puck," recalled left winger John Tonelli, who had been hauled down at 2:08 of overtime by Jim Watson to set up the power play. I yelled at Bobby and he kicked the puck to me.

"Potsy yelled to me and I fed him. It was good communication.

"He was wide open. I knew if I could just get it to him it would be a hell of a chance on goal."

Potvin beat Peeters to his right and Tonelli went into a wild, leaping dance behind the net.

Potvin, who put the puck into his own goal beneath a helpless Billy Smith for a Flyers goal credited to Mel Bridgman to open the scoring in the first period, had given the Islanders a 2-1 lead at 2:20 of the second period.

Mike Bossy and Stefan Persson, who scored on a power play with 3:42 left in regulation time to force overtime, also connected for the Islanders. Bobby Clarke and Rick MacLeish had the other Philadelphia goals.

"They aren't called very often," Islanders' coach Al Arbour said of the penalty against Watson in overtime. "But, if there is an infraction, it should be called and it was an infraction."

It made the difference between the clubs in the sweltering Spectrum, dashing the hopes of 17,077 partisan Flyer supporters.

"We came in after the second period and said to ourselves, 'Hey, this is the Stanley Cup final,' " said Nystrom. "We're here, there's nothing after this.

"I said, 'Come on boys, we've played with more intensity in some ordinary games.' We had to get up and do the job."

The Islanders, all of whom were seeing their first action in a championship NHL final, are better able to stand up to the pressure than they were when they met the Flyers in a 1975 semifinal, losing in seven games, said Nystrom.

"We saw all that light show then, and I think it threw us off," Nystrom said of the Spectrum's pre-game introductions. "This time, we're here to play hockey.

"It's the finals. And I knew my mom and dad were watching on TV. Hey, let's bring on the lights and enjoy it."

Left winger Bob Bourne admitted the Islanders were nervous before the game, but they adopted the attitude that they had two chances to win in Philadelphia and wrest home-ice advantage from the Flyers. The second comes Thursday night, and the Islanders now know they can do no worse than split here.

"Everybody was tense in here before the game," said Bourne. "But we thought, 'Jesus, it's not life or death.'

"It's not like the Super Bowl, because if you lose you get another chance. We had to think that there wasn't any extra tension. We were just meeting another team in the NHL.

Persson said it was "a close game that could have gone either way."

"They got two lucky goals — the first and third. They were goals you don't expect to see in a playoff."

The first, by Bridgman, came when he poked the puck towards the goal and Potvin, trying to nestle it safely under the fallen Smith, pushed it beneath him and into the Islanders' goal.

Referee Andy Van Hellemond called nine minor penalties, six against the Flyers, and two majors, to Watson and New York's Duane Sutter for a fight in the second period. The Islanders had three power-play goals to Philadelphia's one.

For the most part, the game was cleaner than had been predicted.

"A lot of people thought we were going to have the Golden Gloves here tonight, but we didn't," said Arbour.

FLYERS' Rick MacLeish is knocked off his feet courtesy of Dave Langevin of New York Islanders in opening game of best-of-seven National Hockey League Stanley Cup playoff series at Philadelphia Tuesday. The high stick drew blood but no penalty. Islanders won 4-3 in overtime. (AP Wirephoto)

First power-play goal in overtime in 46 years

Watson's holding penalty early in overtime Tuesday night led to a power play goal by Denis Potvin of New York and a 4-3 victory for the Islanders over Philadelphia Flyers.

It was the first power-play goal in NHL overtime in the 46 years such records have been kept.

Watson was penalized by referee Andy Van Hellemond at 2:08 of overtime after Watson grabbed John Tonelli around the head and threw him to the ice.

Brewer, who in his youth, was a noted grabber of opposing forwards in front of the Toronto net, would have been proud of Watson's technique, while wrestler Kiniski would have applauded Watson's theatrics in complaining to Van Hellemond.

"I pulled him down — what can I say? — and Van Hellemond thought it was severe enough to give me a penalty," Watson said. "I probably was deserving of it — I don't know. In a regular season game, probably. But in a Stanley Cup final, I don't know."

Tennis gypsies changed scene

NEW YORK — They've come and gone, those racket-swinging, world-girdling gypsies in white shorts, leaving New York tennis enthusiasts with both pleasant and bitter tastes in their mouths.

The West Side Tennis Club, with its 65 years of tradition tracing back to Big Bill Tilden and Helen Wills, was alive and jumping again last weekend with the Tournament of Champions.

And how the scene has changed. Who ever heard Don Budge grunt? Or swear aloud?

Tennis, 1980 version, is an orchestration of grunts and groans, tirades against linesmen, unharnessed profanity and constant controversies with umpires and linesmen.

"It's dreadful," said Sheena Hamilton, a U.S. Tennis Association committee member. "This is an awful example to set for the kids."

Hamilton was one of the sensitive souls offended by John McEnroe's deportment in an early-round match against Terry Moor of Memphis. McEnroe got upset at one of the linesmen, Dr. Ted Powell. He kicked up clods of dirt and purposely stalled, then got into a shouting match with Powell which included profanities that drew boos from the crowd.

The umpire, Judith Lessing, warned the gifted U.S. Open champion but she declined to impose a point penalty, saying she hadn't heard McEnroe's remarks. McEnroe obliged by walking to the net and repeating the epithets within earshot of the female ump.

"Penalty point!" barked Lessing.

"Boo! Boo!" went the crowd.

This was just one of the incidents which marred a week of sparkling tennis.

Vitas Gerulaitis, in a semi-final Saturday, got in a nasty, continuing hassle with linesman Adrian Clarke and the crowd booed as he left the court.

In the final on Sunday, the spectators, having to choose between two sore toes, threw its allegiance behind Gerulaitis.

The only rumpus occurred at 1-1 in the first set when McEnroe, drenched by rain, called referee Fred Hoyles to courtside and argued the match should be stopped. Hoyles refused.

"Okay, default me," McEnroe was heard to mutter. Nevertheless, he agreed to go on, proceeding to lose 2-6, 6-2, 6-0, another in a series of recent disappointments.

McEnroe made no pretense at hiding his displeasure and finished listlessly, bereft of his old fire and spirit.

Commentator Howard Cosell asked Arthur Ashe, a former tennis star now retired, on television why McEnroe is badgered by the crowd more than anyone else.

"Mac gets pretty picayune," Ashe replied.

Why do officials refuse to crack down on rebellious players?

"Are you kidding?" said Richard Evans, biographer for Ilie Nastase and a former media representative for the pros. "The guys would just walk out and there'd be no television, no tournament, no nothing.

"They don't dare hit the stars."

Evans expressed concern over McEnroe's future.

"He is such a great talent. But, like Nastase, he has perfect vision. When he gets a bad call he blows sky high, just like Ilie.

"He can't stand having something taken away from him. I hope he doesn't let it consume him, as it did Nastase."

Sports tonight

Track and field, baseball and softball provide live-action treats and National Basketball Association playoff action will supply thrills for television viewers tonight.

The final round of eliminations for the 34th annual Greater Victoria high school track and field championships on Friday are scheduled to get underway at 4 in Centennial Stadium.

All baseball and softball games start at 6:30.

And, in the Victoria-Saanich Senior Women's League, New York, New York tackles Vidalin Construction and Victoria Athletics meet Strathcona Stingers at Hyacinth Park.

The fifth game of the best-of-seven NBA playoff final between Philadelphia '76ers and Los Angeles Lakers will be telecast at 11:30 p.m. on Channel 7.

France's vote to attend games blow to U.S. boycott campaign

Times News Services

The United States campaign to enlist support for its boycott of the Moscow Olympics was dealt a setback Tuesday when France decided to attend the Summer Games.

Claude Collard, president of the French Olympic Committee, said the committee's vote to attend the Games was — with the exception of one abstention — unanimous and based strictly on sports considerations and not political motives.

"The athletes are in a very difficult psychological state and our decision was very much influenced by the concern we have for their morale," Collard said. "We refuse that our athletes be used for political ends."

Collard said the decision was made after consultation with all the sports federations in France. He said 17 of the federations had voted in favor of participation, four wanted to delay the decision and two were opposed to going.

Even more important than France to President Carter's boycott strategy is West Germany, which is expected to make its decision Thursday. Last week, the presidium to West Germany's NOC recommended a boycott.

Canada has already announced its decision to support the boycott.

Several undecided countries are expected to follow West Germany's lead. They include Australia, Japan, the Netherlands and Portugal.

The West German Sports Federation said Tuesday that Manfred Ewald, East Germany's top sports official, has hinted at reprisals should West Germany boycott the Games.

The deadline for accepting invitations to Moscow is May 24.

Other countries yet to reach a decision on the boycott are Israel, Spain, South Korea, Turkey and Uruguay.

However, Israel took a step toward joining the boycott forces when the Knesset sports committee recommended that its athletes stay home. The Israeli Olympic Committee is to meet May 22 and make a final decision.

One country which will go to Moscow is the new African country of Zimbabwe.

Important vote

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Top West German sports and political officials huddled in a flurry of discussions today, one day before the National Olympic Committee votes on a boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

West German newspapers predict Thursday's vote will favor a boycott by a narrow margin.

The chance that president Jimmy Carter's boycott call retains some punch could hang in the balance of the committee's decision. Several European nations have indicated they will follow the West Germans' decision.

Carter's boycott was aimed at punishing the Soviet Union for its military intervention in Afghanistan. IOC president Lord Killanin is expected to meet with Carter this week.

Meanwhile, arguments in a class action suit, requesting that the U.S. Olympic Committee's boycott decision be overturned, were heard Tuesday in district court in Washington.

William H. Allen, lawyer for 19 Olympic hopefuls who serve as the plaintiffs in this case, told Judge John H. Pratt that the Amateur Sports Act of 1978 guarantees athletes the right to participate in international competitions.

USOC lawyer Patrick Sullivan said the sports law does not decide whether the United States participates in the Olympics and that that power rests with the USOC.

Pratt said he would rule within several days.

Legion falters in final period

Esquimalt Legion fell victim to a third-period letdown Tuesday and dropped a 15-11 Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League decision to Coquitlam Junior Adanacs at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Adanacs outscored Legion 5-2 in the final period to pick up their first victory of the season while handing the host club its second straight loss.

The first period ended in a 5-5 tie but Coquitlam took a narrow 10-9 lead going into the final 20 minutes.

Adanacs scored seven goals on the odd-man play, including three in the third period.

Another plus factor for Coquitlam was the supurb netminding of Leo Parolini and Doug Zack, who combined to block 41 shots. Victoria goalies Derek Croucher and Herb Isherwood made 34 stops.

Geordie Dean and Colin Broomfield each scored three goals and had five assists to pace Coquitlam. Tony Vendrasco and Bob Jude added three goals each, Ray Richards scored twice and Mark Mosdell contributed a single.

Terry Jay scored twice and added five assists for Esquimalt, which also got a pair of goals from Ed Van Dyk. Will Reid, Kelly Bryant, Mike Thomas, Rhys Wickes, John Crowther and Bruce Alexander added singles.

Warriors back

WINNIPEG (CP) — Winnipeg Warriors are back in the Western Hockey League.

There have been a few changes, however, since the team bearing that name broke up in the early 1960s.

This edition of the Warriors is a junior team, and the league bearing the WHL tag is a major junior circuit instead of the minor professional league it was then.

Coach Fran Huck and assistant coach Bruce Southern said they don't expect to skate away with the WHL title first time round, but plan to form a competitive squad.

No Canada cash for sport officials

OTTAWA (CP) — Sports Minister Gerald Regan said Tuesday the government is sending letters to Canadian sports officials saying it will not pay their travel expenses to Moscow for international meetings being held simultaneously with the Olympic Games.

Regan said it would be hard to explain to the Canadian public why athletes were being asked to boycott the Games if officials were given money to go to Moscow. "It would be very hard to reconcile giving them any financial assistance," he said.

They couldn't expect money if they agreed not to attend Olympic events while in Moscow, he added.

The international sports congresses for each of the 22 Summer Olympic sports are held every four years in conjunction with the Olympics.

In a normal year, one or two Canadian officials would attend each congress. Each sport association normally would bill Sport Canada for air fare, accommodation and living expenses.

But with Canada having joined the boycott movement to protest the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, this is not a normal Olympic year.

Regan said he recognizes the concerns of sports officials who say that East Europeans could be elected to dominant positions in all the congresses if many western representatives do not attend.

But at the same time, he said he is aware the Soviet Union could take advantage of the propaganda value of having westerners in Moscow to counter the effects of a boycott of the Games.

A Sport Canada official said some sports might raise money to send some representatives but many sports could not afford to do so.

Outlook for salmon not at all optimisitic

If the scenario envisioned by Peter Larkin has any substance, sport salmon fishermen don't have very much to look forward to in the future.

Larkin, dean of the Institute of Animal Ecology at the University of British Columbia, recently received an award and $1,000 from the Canadian Sport Fishing Institute for a paper entitled Maybe You Can't Get There From Here: A Foreshortened History of Research in Relation to Management of Pacific Salmon published in the Canadian Journal of Fisheries and Aquatic Sciences.

In the paper, Larkin outlines the history of salmon research in British Columbia from the early days of the late 1800s. He included development of federal hatchery programs until they fell out of favor in the late 1930s; increasing impact from hydro-electric development and offshore fishing by other countries; better understanding of salmon migrations and life history in the 50s and 60s; and computerization of salmon population dynamics and a resurgence of interest in fish culture which laid the groundwork for the federal-provincial Salmonid Enhancement Program (SEP) in the late 60s and early 70s.

But the future of salmon management looks bleak to Larkin, who has excelled as an outspoken critic of many federal fisheries policies.

Larkin suggests in the paper that we must maintain the widest possible genetic variability over the greatest possible range of environments to keep the salmon resource healthy.

"In essence, it means looking at things from the viewpoint of the salmon," he explains.

"To salmon, national boundaries are meaningless, the price of fish is irrelevant, and there are no consolations in satisfying arbitrary recipes for optimal social considerations among fishermen, nor in participating as one of the actors in multiple resource use. Protection, regulation and enhancement should thus be bent to serve the interests of the salmon as a resource rather than to those who use the resource."

Strong, one-sided opinion — to be sure. But it contains an inescapable thread of logic.

Larkin goes on to say that future generations of salmon shouldn't be subject to economic gambles or "discounting" to maximize long-term economic rent from the salmon harvest. Allowing fishermen to overfish one year so they won't go on social assistance dosn't make sense.

"This is a perverted philosophy that places the responsibility for the future on the shoulders of the salmon. Under no circumstances should the permissible harvest of any race of salmon be knowingly exceeded. No minority group, no economic stress, no social pressure should prevail over the common sense of providing as best we can for the future."

He goes on to state the "day-to-day regulation of the fishery must be geared to what is meaningful in salmon biology, not to what is convenient to fishermen or the fishing industry."

We should also be breaking new ground experimentally in fishing practices.

"The fishery has been taken as 'given,' something to be coped with in regulation, rather than as a potential variable to be manipulated.

"While it is comforting to do things as they have been done, it is not productive of new knowledge."

Larkin also points out that a greater commitment should be made to long-term experiments in order to stop repeating past mistakes. He notes that biological experiments of 10 or 20 years duration are often necessary to adequately study a problem.

He notes there is little reason to be optimistic about the future.

"The presssures of other resource uses continue to threaten salmon environments. The techniques of enhancement are still imperfect, and only a sustained program involving adequate research and evaluation can ensure success.

"Of greatest concern, the fisheries, both sports and commercial, are increasingly capable of overharvesting stocks.

"Even if the present system of regulation were executed with flawless technique (which it isn't), it is not demonstrably satisfactory as a way of harvesting each race of salmon, appropriately."

He adds that compromises for "ostensibly good social, economic and political reasons" will add further pressure to salmon stocks.

"The only realistic prognosis for salmon is a long and slow decline in abundance . . ."

This trend will be tempered somewhat by moves to dull the affects of environmental degradation and by enhancement techniques.

"To make it otherwise will require outspoken recognition of the present situation and a commitment to experimental management coupled with long-term research.

"To achieve a doubling of present levels of abundance with our current attitudes doesn't look all that likely: Maybe we can't get there from here."

Victoria bowlers fare well

The Town and Country Lanes senior boys' team from Victoria finished in a tie for third place during regular play last weekend in the National Youth Bowling Council fivepin championships at London, Ont.

Representing British Columbia, Rick Benn, Don Descoteau, Dennis Greig, Bob Finlay and Ross Jones were deadlock with the Saskatchewan representatives, but lost to the squad from Moose Jaw in a rolloff for the third position.

The Victorians all averaged above 200 and rolled the top single-game score (1,340) and the high three-game tally (3,529) in the tournament.

Colwood duo holds buttons

Ralph Baker and Art Bryant retained possession of the Victoria District seniors' golf buttons Monday by defeating Uplands challengers Eric Ware and George Ferguson on the 18th green at the Gorge Vale course.

It was the first defence for Bryant and Baker, who had captured the buttons by ending the four-victory string of Gorge partners Ab Robertson and Harry Donaldson.

New mutuels highlight standardbred meeting

By BILL WALKER

Standarbred racing returns to Sandown Harness Raceway Saturday for the start of a 65-day run and the big difference will be in the mutuel department.

Besides being easier to make a wager, it will be much quicker and the odds board will reflect wagering patterns more quickly.

A new system has been installed by Autotote and racing patrons should at once notice the simplicity of betting plus the speed at which the dual computer system posts odds and payouts.

All betting wickets will have four-way machines which means they are capable of selling any type of ticket, i.e. win, place, show and exactor.

An innovation for Sandown this year is that Triactor wagering will be held on the last race each day. In a triactor bet, the patron must select the correct order of finish of the first three horses. This has proved a most popular gimmick bet wherever it has been instituted and the reward can be healthy. The Cloverdale record is $10,800, set in 1976.

Ten races will be held each day with exactor wagering on the first nine races.

The racing schedule is changed from last year, however. There will be no racing on Mondays, except on holidays such as Victoria Day.

Racing will be held Tuesdays (except when there is Monday racing), Thursday and Fridays at 5:30 p.m. and Saturdays and holidays at 1:30 p.m.

Plans for the erection of a new grandstand and glass-enclosed clubhouse are in the works, but will have to wait until next year or until the track property is removed from the Agricultural Land Freeze.

An application for such removal is now being processed and it is hoped that construction may begin in November with the target date for completion May 1981.

A heavy influx of stock over the weekend and during the week has filled much of the available stall space as owners and trainers start over again after taking time off since the winter Cloverdale meeting shut down on April 12.

Among the invitational horses due here are Elegant Star A, Bethany Blaze, Pegassus Ernie, Winsome Adios, Mitchs Butch, Amortizer's Beauty, Call N Raise, Magnus Almahurst, Satin Satan, Mowak Hanover and Baron Nuff. On the preferred list are: Flirt With Pride, Boozers Delight, Dark Phantom, J.D. Sincous, Delta Duke, Holridge Gringo and Holridge Elaine.

Owner-trainer-driver Joe Hudon will have the largest stable of 26 horses while trainer George Brown isn't far behind with 21.

Hudon was the leading driver at Sandown last year after suffering a broken leg early in the meeting and he was also the leader at Cloverdale both in the number of wins and percentage.

Two of Hudon's outstanding horses are Mohawk Hanover and Baron Nuff.

Brown was the leading trainer at Cloverdale with 71 victories, 36 seconds and 40 thirds. He had 24 per cent wins and 48 per cent in the money.

Brown's horses will be driven by Mike Stymest and Keith Quinlan.

Quinlan is new to Sandown and finished in the top six at Cloverdale.

Other drivers here, or planning to come, include Demnis Linford, Sten Ericsson, Leonard Hill, Miles Armstrong, Phil Coleman, Willie Urquhart, Dave Jungquist, Lou Virag, Greg Tonkin, Jim Gagnon, Tom Burke, Bob Boyd, George Procope, Ernie Arsenault, Bob Dryden, Grant Hollingsworth. Before the season is over it is estimated that at least 80 drivers will have appeared in a sulky.

However, one who won't — at least not regularly — is Keith Linton.

Linton, who won North American driving championship last year, will race the bulk of his stable at Calgary.

Opening day will be United Way Day with gate receipts going to that charity. Last year, over $2,500 was turned over to the United Way.

First post Saturday (and Monday) is 1:30 p.m. General admission is $1 and bus service to the track is available through Conmac Stage Lines.

Buses will leave the Belleville Street site (near Douglas) at 12 p.m. on Saturdays and holidays and 4 p.m. on weekdays. Cost of bus trip, including admission, is $5.

General manager is Jim Keeling, Sr., racing secretary, Garry Woods, and track judge, Leary Claypool.

Muskol has been known as an effective insect repellent for years.
And the reasons are simple.
Muskol is 100% active ingredients.
No sweet smelling additives.
No fillers or dilutants.
Muskol is practically odourless and it protects against black flies, mosquitoes, and other insects for up to a full eight hours. Because it's concentrated, it lasts longer and is more economical to use than so called cheaper brands.

A lot of fancy names and labels have come and gone in the last twenty years. But Muskol is still the experienced outdoorsman's choice. Because it really works. And that's the truth of the matter.

Two city tennis aces on Canadian squad

TORONTO — Wendy Barlow and Nina Bland of Victoria have been selected to Canada's Federation Cup team for the international tennis competition in West Berlin, May 19-25.

The team will also include Marjorie Blackwood of Ottawa, three-time national champion, and Karen Dewis of London, Ont.

Canada meets Yugoslavia in the first round.

Gill gets first win

Kevin Gill picked up his first pitching decision of the season Tuesday while helping Capital Radiators to a 12-2 victory over Quadra Warehouse in a shortened Victoria Cosmopolitan Senior Baseball League game at Lambrick Park.

Gill received a lot of defensive aid from his clubmates and finished up by yielding seven hits, striking out two and yielding only one walk in a game which ended after five innings because of a 10-run lead rule.

Wayne Proceviat drove in two runs and Ron Arcuri scored three times to lead the Capital offence.

Quad Warehouse	011	00	— 2 7 2
Capital Radiators	300	36	—12 9 2

Lions get Huclack

British Columbia Lions have acquired slotback Dan Huclack from Toronto Argonauts in exchange for the Lions' second-round pick in the 1981 Canadian Football League college draft.

Huclack, a 22-year-old native of Vancouver, was the Argos' second-round pick in 1979 and was used in a back-up capacity last season.

The Lions have also announced the signing of two 23-year-old Canadian offensive guards and an import defensive back, raising the training camp roster close to 80 players.

Lynn breaks out, hits for the cycle

By The Associated Press

When is a triple better than a homer? When it follows a homer . . . and a double . . . and a single.

Fred Lynn's drive off the wall in centre field in the eighth inning went for a triple as he hit for the cycle for the first time in his career to lead Boston Red Sox to a 10-5 victory over Minnesota Twins in an American League baseball game Tuesday night.

"I'd rather have the triple because I've never hit for the cycle," Lynn said. "I only had one triple last year.

"So I've gotten my quota for this year. I made good use of it."

Lynn doubled in the first inning when the Red Sox scored once, hit a two-run homer off loser John Verhoeven to give Boston a 6-5 lead in the fourth and singled in a run in the sixth before his run-scoring triple in the eighth completed the cycle.

Last year's batting champion had a slow start at the plate, but he now has three homers in the last three games, and 13 hits and 10 RBI in his last five outings.

"I can tell just by the way I take a pitch how I can hit. Mike (Marshall) threw me two screwballs the last time up. The last one was close but I held up. I knew I would hit the next one well."

Minnesota manager Gene Mauch said: "I'll tell you this about Fred Lynn. You pitch him down and he might get a hit. You pitch him up and he will get a hit."

In other games, Kansas City Royals stopped New York Yankees 4-1, Chicago White Sox nipped Milwaukee Brewers 6-5 in 10 innings, Detroit Tigers edged Oakland A's 4-3 and Baltimore Orioles beat Texas Rangers 4-2.

Renie Martin had started a game last Saturday, but scheduled Kansas City starter Paul Splittorff injured his back during warmups and manager Jim Frey called on the slender right-hander to pitch with two days' rest.

He responded with 5 2-3 innings of hitless ball and went on to post the victory as the Royals scored all their runs in the third inning, two of them on a homer by Willie Aikens that hit the facade of the third deck in right field in the game at New York.

Richie Hebner's two-run triple in the first inning sent Detroit on the way to victory over Oakland, which still leads the AL West.

Kirk Gibson homered for the Tigers, and Dave Revering also had a solo shot for the A's.

Rookie catcher Dan Graham, called up from Rochester last week, had three hits, including a homer and the game-winning single, to lead struggling Baltimore over Texas.

In National League action, Montreal Expos defeated Houston Astros 3-2, Cincinnati Reds whipped New York Mets 15-4, Atlanta Braves downed Philadelphia Phillies 7-3, San Francisco Giants whipped Pittsburgh Pirates 5-0, San Diego Padres edged St. Louis Cardinals 3-2 and Los Angeles Dodgers stopped Chicago Cubs 4-2.

SMU still ahead with 47 berths

St. Michael's University School still heads the pack after two days of eliminations for berths in the 34th annual Greater Victoria high school track and field championships Friday at Centennial Stadium.

Eliminations were scheduled to resume at 4 this afternoon at Centennial.

St. Michael's has placed 47 athletes, including 24 in the important "A" category, for the championship, which begins with field events at 11:30 a.m. Track events start at 12:30 p.m.

Mt. Douglas has qualified for a total of 42 berths, including 33 in "A", while defending-champion Claremont has produced 41, including 23 "A".

Oak Bay and St. Patrick's, meantime, picked up victories Tuesday as competition in the junior high school and elementary portions of the All-Schools Relays wrapped up at Centennial.

Oak Bay won the junior high school over-all title with 90 points and the boys' crown with 39 while St. Patricks finished atop the elementary division with 100 points.

Arbutus, which finished runner-up over-all to Oak Bay, won the girls segment of the competition. Harbor View was third over-all.

Mount Newton placed second among elementary schools and Willows was third.

St. Michael's University School won the elementary boys' division while St. Patricks topped the girls.

Before the judge

Judge Lorne Pearce committed a 35-year-old prison inmate to stand trial on a charge of first-degree murder following a preliminary hearing which ended Tuesday in Victoria provincial court.

Pearce ordered Michael Thomas Leslie, who was serving a prison term at William Head, to stand trial in connection with the March 16 stabbing death of William Engel, another inmate at the federal medium-security prison.

The preliminary, which began Monday, ended one day earlier than scheduled.

Judge Harold Alder ordered a pre-sentence report for a 19-year-old Shawnigan Lake youth who pleaded guilty to an attempted breaking and entering Monday night.

Lance Arthur Roberts was remanded until June 4 for sentencing.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the court witnesses saw Roberts trying to break into the booth at the former Eaton's parking lot in the 900-block Gordon at about 9:40 p.m.

When apprehended a short distance away, Roberts told Victoria police he was unemployed and low on funds and tried to get into the booth after seeing a money bag inside.

A 28-year-old man who pleaded guilty in connection with 1977 charges was given a suspended sentence and six months probation.

Court was told Barton's 1969 Sunbeam was involved in an accident April 4, 1977, with a parked car in the 3100-block Quadra which resulted in the total demolition of Barton's vehicle and less severe damage to the parked car.

Mulligan said Barton's passengers were injured in the mishap and had to be taken to hospital but he fled the scene before police arrived.

Six days later, Barton went to Victoria police and admitted being the driver and leaving the scene. He also admitted being under a two-year suspension imposed Oct. 23, 1975, in Saskatchewan when he was alse fined $500 for criminal negligence.

Mulligan explained that it had been impossible to serve a summons on Barton since May, 1977.

Fined $500 for impaired driving was 59-year-old John Blaszczyk, 1054 Pembroke.

Two gun charges end in convictions

David Alan Paulson, 31, was convicted by a county court jury Tuesday after 75 minutes deliberation of two offences but acquitted of a third.

He will be sentenced by Judge Peter Millward June 20 for possession of a firearm for a purpose dangerous to the public peace and pointing a firearm at Barry Smith in an Esquimalt apartment Oct. 5, 1979.

Paulson was found not guilty of discharging a firearm at Smith with intent to wound.

Court was given no motive for Paulson's actions which occurred while he was drunk inside the apartment and Smith came to the door.

Break-in earns pen time

A sentence of two years and three months in penitentiary was imposed Tuesday by Judge William Davies Tuesday on John George Reti, 33.

Reti pleaded guilty in county court to breaking and entering a house at 1137 Greenwood in Esquimalt Jan. 24 with intent to commit an indictable offence.

Court was told Reti, who spent almost five months in custody, has criminal convictions going back to 1963 for such offences as theft, fraud, false pretences, uttering, breaking and entering.

Defence in pot trial completes phase one

The defence in the trial of eight men accused of importing 33.5 tons of cannabis marijuana last year completed the first phase of its evidence in county court Tuesday and was to start testimony today regarding the condition of the Panamanian freighter Samarkanda.

The third defence scientist, botanist Dr. Loran Anderson of Florida State University, agreed with two previous defence experts that there are three species of cannabis — sativa, indica and ruderalis.

Defence counsel William Deverell told the jury in his opening remarks the Narcotic Control Act only includes cannabis sativa and cannabis (marijuana) is defined as that and indica is not defined.

The prosecution, in its case, had one witness describe analysis of what was found near Tofino as cannabis marijuana. Two expert witnesses called by the prosecution said there is but one species of cannabis marijuana.

Anderson told the jury Tuesday he has done wood anatomy on indica and sativa and there are striking differences between the two, both qualitative and quantative.

He believed that of those scientists who have done original work on this subject, the majority believe cannabis has more than one species.

Vandalism curbs eyed

DUNCAN — North Cowichan council is considering a full-scale anti-vandalism campaign after more than $40,000 was spent last year to repair damage done by vandals to street lights.

Council was told by RCMP Sgt. K. von Brevern that the public often does not report acts of vandalism. He suggested the municipality adopt a veto-vandalism campaign which would allow vandalism to be reported anonymously.

Council also discussed the possibility of curfews but van Brevern suggested a small outlay for anti-vandalism pamphlets would be more worthwhile.

Rutledge here to defend title

Defending-champion Jim Rutledge, ending a four-tournament campaign on a Texas mini-tour, has returned to Victoria for an attempt to retain his title in the annual $10,000 Cedar Hill Open tournament.

Rutledge, who is planning to again play the Canadian pro tour this summer, will have plenty of tough competition in the 36-hole event that runs Saturday and Sunday at the Cedar Hill course.

Thirty-one other professionals, who are shooting for the top cash prize of $800, and several outstanding amateurs are listed in the field of 191 players, who represent 47 clubs. In order to handle the huge number of contestants, tournament officials have scheduled play to start at 6:30 each morning.

Rutledge is slated to start at 1:52 p.m. in a group with three Vancouverites, pros Tom Whittle and Terry Wiens and amateur Rick Gibson.

Veteran pros John Morgan, Bill Wakeham and Bob Cox are slated to begin play at 1:45.

BURNABY — Crews from Brentwood College in Mill Bay won 16 of 27 events Sunday to finish first over-all in the B.C. Youth Rowing Championships on Burnaby Lake.

Boys, coached by Tony Carr, rowed over a 1,500-metre course while the girls, coached by Susan Garvey, competed over 1,000 metres and Brentwood was most impressive in its victories in the girls' varsity fours, lightweight fours and lightweight eights and the boys' varsity fours and eights, lightweight fours and eights and single sculls.

As well as their 16 victories, Brentwood crews finished second in 14 events.

Shawnigan Lake Boys' School had five firsts and junior members of the Maple Bay Rowing Club (who attend Cowichan High School) had two as the young Vancouver Island rowers completely dominated the provincial meet, taking 23 titles out of the 27 events.

The Shawnigan Lake boys won the colt fours and eights, the varsity and lightweight double sculls and the bantam single sculls while Maple Bay won the girls' novice eights and the girls' lightweight fours.

Other crews competing in the championship regatta were from four Vancouver-area schools — Hillside, Sir Winston Churchill, St. Georges and West Vancouver — and the Burnaby Lake Rowing Club.

Watson pads money lead

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (Reuter) — Tom Watson pushed his leading 1980 earnings total to $300,525 by earning $54,000 for his victory in the Byron Nelson tournament Sunday, the Professional Golfers' Association said Monday.

Nelson stretches string of shutouts

Mel Nelson fired his third consecutive shutout Tuesday while pitching Athletics to a 4-0 Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League win over Tod Hackett Construction at Central Park.

Nelson and Ken Fox, another A's pitcher, have shut out the opposition for 47 straight innings. Nelson, who was tagged for three runs in the first inning of the opening game of the season, hasn't allowed a run in 26 innings since and has chalked up a 3-1 record. Fox is 3-0 and hasn't allowed a run in 21 innings.

Nelson struck out 11 batters, didn't issue any walks and allowed only singles by Mike Lee and losing-pitcher Barry Wilkin as well as a double by Brian Grexton.

Catcher Jim Boyd got the offence off the ground in the first inning by leading off with a single. Jim Moody and Bob Bugslag then reached base on errors and Boyd and Moody both scored on a single by Bob Holness.

In the fourth inning, Boyd cracked a single, went to third on a single by Moody and stole home.

At Hyacinth Park, Pam Jones boosted her record to 6-0 by pitching Island Dryco Breakers to a 9-1 Victoria-Saanich Senior Women's League victory over Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart.

In the other game, Bemister's Welding topped New York, New York, 3-1.

Sue Molliett hit a triple and a single to drive in three runs for Breakers.

Robin Bartlett smacked a two-run triple in the seventh inning and Marilyn Bolton hurled a three-hitter to produce the win for Bemister's.

At Heywood Avenue Park, Strathcona Hotel tripped Remco Office Systems 5-1 in a Heywood Men's League battle.

A two-run homer by Terry Karpiuk keyed a four-run first inning for Strathcona.

Bottlers triumph

Goodwill Bottling of the Vancouver Island Intermediate "A" Lacrosse League tripped Saanich Hunter Construction of the Vancouver Island Junior "B" League 18-11 in an interlocking game Tuesday at Pearkes Arena.

Frank Wendt set the pace for Bottlers with four goals and five assists. Shawn Dheensaw was three and four, Glen Jay three and three and Doug Barnes two and six. Gordie Christiaens also scored three times and singles were added by Paul Cullen, Bob Simpson and Alton Davis.

Chris Jackson was the top gun for Saanich with three and three. Chris Clark also scored three goals, Darren Collier added two and Lyle Gurney, Pete Van Buskirk and Dan Barney contributed singles.

Brett Savory of Saanich was the busiest goaltender with 37 saves while Russ Gurney blocked 29 shots for Goodwill. Each goalie also had three assists.

Sagging economy, slow speeds blamed as crowds desert Indy

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Slower racing speeds and a sagging economy apparently have combined to cut into the masses of people that traditionally flood the Indianapolis Motor Speedway each May.

The crowd for last Saturday's opening day of qualifying — annually the biggest throng prior to the day of the Indianapolis 500 — was estimated by Indianapolis police at close to 160,000. But a number of veteran Speedway observers felt that estimate was high.

Outside the Speedway, where signs advertise parking on nearby lawns at anywhere from $5 to $3 for a longer walk, business was definitely off.

"This just isn't like it used to be," said Tom Downs, who sat on the curb in front of his almost-empty yard. "Just a couple of years ago, we had 'em making reservations for these spaces a year in advance.

"Now it's probably not worth standing out here."

Sunday's second day of time trials was even worse, with fewer than 25,000 people on hand, giving the 556-acre racing plant an almost deserted look.

As recently as 1978, when top speeds at the track were hovering above 320 kilometres an our (200 m.p.h.), crowds on the first day of qualifying were estimated as high as 300,000.

That might have been exaggerated, but the crowds were enormous — and enthusiastic.

When a big-name driver walked into the pits, the crowd buzzed in anticipation of a hot lap. Now, with new rules restricting horsepower and lowering top speeds into the 300s in the interest of safety, the people who do turn out for the time trials have adopted a wait-and-see attitude.

They saved their only real enthusiasm of the 1980 pole day for Johnny Rutherford and Mario Andretti, the only drivers to average more than 305 on their four-lap, 16-kilometre qualifying runs.

Then there is the economy of the nearby cities which is depressed thanks to the slumping auto industry.

The interest, which was always high in those areas, may still be there. However, the $5 infield tickets for qualifying sessions now is considered a hardship for many family.

And that price escalates to $10 apiece on race day.

Although peace now reigns in car racing, there also remains some fallout from the bitter legal and verbal hassles last year between the U.S. Auto Club and the Championship Auto Racing Teams.

John Cooper, the new president of the Speedway, admits that problems exist, but refuses to join the doomsayers.

"Actually, the crowd Saturday was what I thought it would be," he said. "I do think the general economy, the high cost of gasoline and the jobs situation in central Indiana hurt some.

"But I think that most of the people who want to come out will still be here."

WINKLER IN LEAGUE

WINNIPEG (CP) — A new team from Winkler, Man., will join the Manitoba Junior Hockey League for next season.

The proof of that axiom is on view this week as drivers scramble to get into the 64th Indianapolis 500, wrestling to get a few more miles per hour out of their exotic, and often balky, machines.

With one more weekend of time trials remaining before the May 25 race, 14 positions remain open on the 33-car grid. And it would appear that making the race should be easier than in a long time.

Speeds have plunged since peaking in 1978 when the fastest over-all field was established.

That year, the top qualifier made the lineup with a speed of 202.156 miles an hour, while the slowest car in the field qualified at 187.266 m.p.h.

This time around, the fastest car in the field after two days of qualifying is Johnny Rutherford's Chaparral, clocked at 192.256 m.p.h.

Nobody else is expected to come close. And it appears the slowest of the 19 first-weekend qualifiers — Dick Ferguson at 182.880 m.p.h. — may be fast enough to stay in the lineup after the bumping begins.

But nothing is coming easily for those still looking for the magic combination of engine, chassis and driving skill. The problem is rooted in the United States Auto Club's restriction on manifold pressure, which has limited horsepower.

"Without horsepower, you've got to do it with chassis and driving," said Ferguson, one of more than 20 Indy rookies attempting to make the race. "The chassis is everything when you don't have the power to pull out of any trouble in the turns.

"You've got to be very, very certain the car is balanced just right. It can't be pushing and it can't be loose; it has to be neutral."

It's common knowledge that the way a lot of people found more speed last year was to develop a method of cheating on the manifold pressure.

In fact, Ferguson's crew was caught illegally bypassing the valve designed to limit such power and he was banned from qualifying for the 1979 race.

"I don't think you'll see that much speed gained this year," Ferguson said. "This year they've made it so you can't overcome the valve."

No beer in Beacon Hill — even for charity: city

A beer garden in Beacon Hill Park to raise money for the United Way was rejected Tuesday by city council's parks committee.

Aldermen said the park in special and should be kept free of all commercial activity, even if in aid of charity.

United Way executive director Joe Landon said in a letter the beer garden was to be held as part of the Royal Victoria Marathon next Sept. 20.

He asked permission to use the grassy field in front of the totem pole, bordered by Camas Circle and Dallas Road, and had the preliminary approval of the parks administrator and parks committee chairman Ald. Ken Sinclair.

But after Ald. Bill McElroy said approving the application would lead to an avalanche of proposals for money-making ventures in the park, which should remain "sacrosanct," the committee voted it down.

However, aldermen instructed parks administrator Al Smith to try to find an alternative site.

Mayor Bill Tindall suggested Dallas Road itself, as the street will be closed from Douglas to Cook that day for the runners.

The committee did approve the use of Centennial Square beside city hall for a beer and wine garden from June 23 to July 1 sponsored by the Inter-Cultural Association of Victoria.

It will be part of Folkfest, the annual fund-raising celebration of the ICA, featuring ethnic food stalls, music and dancing. The association represents more than 30 ethnic and cultural groups in the Victoria area.

Blood donor generosity tops goal

The Canadian Red Cross exceeded its target of 300 blood donors by 17 at its Fort Street clinic Monday and Tuesday and officials are hoping clinics the rest of the week are as successful.

The Lions Club is sponsoring a clinic between 2 and 8 p.m. today at the Esquimalt Recreation Centre and the same hours will apply at Spectrum secondary school, 957 West Burnside, on Thursday.

Clinic hours at Victoria General Hospital Friday are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

What toxic jetsam? Rogers hasn't heard

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers disclaims any knowledge of a serious threat to the environment of B.C.'s north coast.

Rogers said Monday it's all news to him. "I haven't heard about it. I don't know anything about it."

Coast Guard authorities have warned shipping to keep a sharp eye out for 18 orange-colored drums, filled with a highly toxic chemical, floating somewhere off the coast.

The 45-gallon drums contain Xcide 320 and Xcide 370, used in oil field work to kill bacteria in crude oil. A spill would be deadly to fish and other marine life.

The chemical also has a low flashpoint — 83 degrees Fahrenheit. If a drum floats ashore on a hot day, it could explode.

The drums were lost from a barge near Prince Rupert during a storm last November. However the federal government was not advised of the danger until last week.

Olde England Inn legalized?

A proposed bylaw change which in effect will legalize the operation of the Olde England Inn on Lampson Street in Esquimalt will be considered at a public hearing tonight.

The inn stands on land zoned for multiple dwelling and duplex use.

The changes proposed for the zoning bylaw include the establishment of a restricted tourist facility zone for much of the site occupied by the inn.

The municipality has been trying since 1954 to reconcile the non-conforming use of the site with public opposition to zoning changes.

This zoning proposal comes after the inn was alleged to have used a duplex on Hither Green near its main site for overflow accommodation last year.

The proposal which will be considered tonight calls for rezoning of the site of the inn, its auxiliary buildings, Anne Hathaway's Cottage and two duplexes, including one off Wychbury.

But other holdings, including a house on Lampson, two on Wychbury and a duplex on Hither Green are not to be rezoned.

The hearing will be held at 7 p.m. in the Esquimalt Recreation Centre, 527 Fraser.

Trustee fires at Bunn

Criticism of the school budget by former school board chairman Peter Bunn sparked an indignant response from one trustee and bemusement from others Monday night.

Bunn, now an Oak Bay alderman, had criticized Greater Victoria school trustees for passing a budget 17 per cent higher than last year, despite declining enrolment, and for providing too much social service.

In the interests of accuracy, Trustee Win Mott said he felt compelled to reply.

"I hesitate to call Bunn a liar, but he is perambulating in the outer suburbs of accuracy," Mott said.

Raising the budget from about $49 million to $55 million was only 11.5 per cent increase, he pointed out.

Bunn had also said the board reflected its domination by the NDP, but the budget, Mott said, had passed unanimously. It was ridiculous to think that every member was a party member, Mott said, raising laughter when someone suggested "Comrade Hutchison," and "Comrade Yorke."

"I challenge anyone to find who belongs to whom on the board," according to voting record and affiliation, Mott said.

Also, he declared, the increase in mill rate for education — from 45.9 to 47.8 — is less than 5 per cent, not "less than 8 per cent" as alleged by Bunn.

The decline in enrolment had been 850 pupils, not 5,000; and the schools employ no social workers, Mott said.

Finally, he noted, while Bunn had been chairman of the board in 1974 the budget did increase 17 per cent.

"I don't think anyone will be happier tonight than Peter Bunn, having goaded trustees like dear old Win into defending the board," Trustee Peter Yorke said. The board should come to expect Bunn's periodic outrageous comments.

Trustee John Young made the final riposte. The former chairman's droppings are what he calls "horse buns."

Trustees to examine new entry systems

A double or continuous entry system of enrolling children in kindergarten or Grade 1 will be examined by Greater Victoria School District.

Trustees adopted a motion Monday calling for superintendent Allan Stables to report on the feasibility of having children enter the school system on a more flexible basis.

At present if a child is five before Dec. 31 he can enter school in September of that year. But if he is born a day later he must wait until the following September to go to school, trustee John Young said in calling for the double-entry system.

The situation is absurd, Young said, suggesting the extra year of waiting for youngsters born in the New Year makes a great difference in their education.

Maturation and the development of motor skills, co-ordination, intellectual and social abilities is important when considered in terms of a fifth of the child's life.

The lost fifth is a price paid for the rest of their school lives, Young said, especially for boys who mature at a different rate than girls. They may be "kept at the failing edge through their whole schooling."

By making the age threshhold Feb. 1, half of those children eliminated the previous fall would be admitted, he suggested. The subsequent September enrolment would then be smaller.

Although money should be the least consideration, such a system would result in a larger per capita grant from the education ministry, too, Young pointed out.

Peter Yorke supported the motion, the same one he put before the board unsuccessfully 2½ years ago.

Mark Fisher said there was merit in the idea. Children develop at various ages: "Some probably shouldn't start school until they are seven, they are doing so well at home. Then starting school addles their brains."

Stables said the proposal had always been defeated by cost, because it needs more teachers and an effective assessment program.

Teacher Mary Lissy helps children at clinic paint posters for charity ball

Society's first charity ball Saturday

The Victorian Celebrations Society's first charity ball is scheduled for May 17 with half the proceeds going towards the G.R. Pearkes Clinic.

Victorian costumes are expected to be out in full force but modern formal attire will also be allowed.

The dinner and dance will be held at Craigdarroch Commons on the UVic campus.

Patrons of the ball are Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy, who will not attend, and Mayor Doug Watts of Oak Bay who will be there to lead the Grande March.

Door prizes, including a four-hour fishing trip aboard a yacht, and dinners for two at a variety of Victoria restaurants will be offered.

Bumper fruit crops seen

KELOWNA (CP) — Based on early estimates, B.C. Tree Fruits Ltd. is predicting the largest cherry crop and one of the four largest apple crops in 20 years.

Joe Bauer, domestic sales manager for the grower co-operative, said today there was a very heavy bloom in cherry orchards this year and preliminary estimates called for a 15-per-cent increase over the 1979 crop of 735,000 cases containing 20.5 pounds of the fruit.

The 1980 apple crop is expected to top 8.4 million 40-pound boxes, a 10-per-cent increase over the 1979 harvest, Bauer said.

He could not say whether the bumper crops would mean lower prices for consumers because this would depend on growing and marketing conditions.

Ukulele sound featured

Massed ukuleles will ring in two lower Vancouver Island concerts tonight and Thursday at Oak Bay Secondary School auditorium.

Ukuleles Unlimited will feature students from 14 Greater Victoria elementary schools, student choirs, stage band and Dixieland ensemble, with two adult groups and performers from Galiano Island and Duncan.

Students were chosen from among 500 children taking ukulele lessons in city schools.

Tonight's concert will involve Monterey senior choir, Lambrick Park stage band, Island Ukuleles A adult ensemble, and massed novice players from Burnside, Craigflower, Frank Hobbs, Galiano, Monterey, Northridge, Tillicum and Sir James Douglas elementary schools.

Thursday's concert will involve Campus View senior choir, Oak Bay Dixielanders, Island Ukeleles A and B, massed second-year students, and massed first-year players from Bench School at Duncan, Blanshard, Craigflower, Hampton, Hillcrest, James Bay, Quadra, Torquay and Victoria West.

Starting time is 7:30 and admission is $1.

North Cowichan bows to budget pressures

DUNCAN — Increases in school taxes, the Cowichan Valley regional board levy, police and social welfare costs are responsible for a rise in the 1980 municipal budget approved by North Cowichan council.

The general-purpose mill rate has been retained at last year's level, 29 mills, but the value of one mill on the assessment for general purposes has increased by $5,121.

The provisional budget calls for a total of $15,248,700 while the actual budget amounts to $15,987,931.

Net increases were recorded for general purposes ($619,949) and utilities and special areas ($150,346) while decreases in other areas amounted to $31,064.

Benefit cheques mailed early

Federal government benefit cheques — old age pension, Canada pension and family allowance — were mailed two weeks early this month.

Officials in Vancouver would not give a reason but Mary Louise Campbell of the Victoria office of the federal income security section, said the cheques were mailed early to avoid any possible disruption in the mail delivery this month.

Donna MacPherson, Vancouver district office manager for income security programs, would only talk about possible disruptions in service and stressed, "I didn't say anything about the post office."

Some observers see the move as an apparent effort to combat the threat of a strike by postal workers who can legally walk off the job in 10 days.

MacPherson also dismissed suggestions the arrival of family allowance and old age security cheques in Quebec might sway voters in the sovereignty-association referendum on May 20.

"Thousands have called us today," she said. "They have been told it's their May cheque and they won't get another until the end of June. If they lose it, or spend it, that's their concern."

Search, rescue teams in week-long contests

Canadian and American military search and rescue specialists are competing in Sarex 80, an annual Canadian-American search and rescue specialists competition.

The week-long competition, which ends on Friday, is being held at March Air Force Base in California.

Representing Canada are specialists from CFB Comox, CFB Edmonton, the Canadian Forces Survival Training School in Edmonton, CFB Trenton, Ont., CFB Summerside, P.E.I. and CFS Gander, Nfld.

The United States' rescue units are from the USAF, the USAF Reserve and the Air National Guard.

In a para-jumping event each competitor must parachute from 450 metres and land as close as possible to a target with a diameter of 12 centimetres.

Teams consisting of the aircraft crew and three rescue specialists must carry out simulated search and rescue exercises, searching a predetermined area, finding a simulated crash site and delivering bundles by freefall and para-drop methods.

The final phase of the competition is a simulated medical exercise in which each specialist's treatment of a simulated casualty will be assessed by medical experts.

The competition series first began with a Canadian competition in 1968. American teams began competing in 1972. The site is alternated between the two countries. In 1979 it was held at CFB Summerside.

Hewitt ready to take flak over turkey flip-flop

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Tuesday he is prepared to take the flak over his flip-flop decision to permit the sale of Maplewood Poultry to the international conglomerate Cargill Grain, giving it a virtual monopoly in B.C.'s turkey processing industry.

The opposition devoted the entire question period in the legislature to the issue.

Other cabinet ministers sloughed off questions on whether Cargill had been contributing to Socred campaign funds or whether B.C. consumers will be protected against rising poultry prices.

But Hewitt provided a spirited defence of the government position.

The minister told the house he originally recommended the federal Foreign Investment Review Agency reject Cargill's application to buy Maplewood because he was sure he had a Canadian buyer standing by. But the prospective purchaser, Pan-Ready Poultry, later withdrew its offer.

"My concern, as minister of agriculture, is to ensure that we have a turkey industry in this province and that the industry survives. In order to do that I have had to reverse a decision that I made," Hewitt said.

Therefore he has asked FIRA in Ottawa to reconsider its ruling disallowing the Cargill application.

Hewitt's statement was greeted with cries of "shame" and "turkey-lurkey" from opposition benches.

Outside the house the minister said: "I've got to consider the survival of the turkey industry in this province. We're talking about hundreds of millions of dollars in investment by people in the turkey industry."

If Cargill does not buy and reopen the Maplewood plant at Abbotsford, which has been closed since April 18, turkey farmers will have no place to send their birds for processing, Hewitt said.

NDP MLA Dave Stupich (Nanaimo) accused the government of bowing to Cargill blackmail.

"Cargill threatened to close down all turkey processing in the province unless the provincial cabinet reversed its decision and recommended to FIRA that Cargill be allowed to buy the remaining turkey processing facility in the province," he said.

Hewitt did not deny that the big conglomerate had brought heavy pressure to bear.

"It is not for me to defend Cargill," he said.

Stupich argued the government should buy Maplewood itself and also buy back Panco Poultry which the Socreds sold to Cargill two years ago, and save the poultry industry for British Columbians.

Hewitt, however, rejected any such action.

"I'm mot prepared to take the socialist move and have the government go into the turkey industry or any other industry," he said. "I don't think that's where we should be."

He also rejected the suggestion that the government provide financing for B.C. turkey growers to take over and operate Maplewood themselves.

It would set a bad precedent, he said.

"What happens when a jam factory is in serious financial difficulties and wants to close its doors?"

Hewitt said he has asked the federal government to deal quickly with the renewed Cargill application since turkey and broiler production is reaching the end of a cycle and the birds will soon be ready for processing.

If it takes any longer than two weeks for the FIRA approval it will have a serious effect on the turkey producer, he said.

What happens if FIRA refuses to change it's ruling?

"I haven't got an answer to that question," Hewitt admitted.

"If FIRA does not approve the Cargill application and the sale cannot proceed, we've got a major problem in agriculture in this province."

If the sale does go through, Cargill will control 80 per cent of B.C.'s turkey processing and 100 per cent of turkey poult production along with 43 per cent of broiler processing.

NDP agriculture critic Barbara Wallace said Hewitt admitted some time ago this concentration was a matter of concern.

"He has obviously overcome his anxiety, however, to the detriment of the B.C. consumer and to the great benefit of Cargill," she said.

"Cargill is corporate agriculture personified and its growing presence in British Columbia is the death knell for the family farm," Wallace added.

Cargill is expected to pay $5 million for the Maplewood operation and spend another $1.5 million upgrading the plant. The improved facility will employ 215 workers instead of the 135 employed previously, Hewitt said.

Meanwhile, a Cargill official said in Vancouver he feels sorry for Hewitt for being obliged to change his policy.

"I think he was totally misled by the poultry growers," said Peter Hayward, Cargill executive supervisor of poultry and feed operations.

"My feeling is he was told by them (the poultry growers) there was another buyer. Anybody can be a buyer if somebody else puts up the money."

REEL GOOD TIME was had when piper Bruce Gandy and dancers Michele Spilsbury, Laurel Curtis, Kathy Bradshaw and Kelly Curtis visited Mayor Bill Tindall at city hall on Tuesday. They coaxed him into trying his skill at the reel and he also agreed to open the 43rd annual Highland Games that begin in Macdonald Park at 9 a.m. Sunday. Tindall will officially open the games at 1 p.m. More than 500 dancers will compete and for the first time in the sporting events there will be a mini-marathon, 10 kilometres around James Bay. A total of 200 have registered for the mini-marathon.

Vander Zalm flays Howard

By JAKE BANKY

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm woke up grumpy Tuesday afternoon.

The minister had been snoozing in the legislature before the outbreak of a procedural wrangle towards the end of a long afternoon. When the house adjourned, Vander Zalm came storming out into the corridor and lit into NDP house leader Frank Howard.

"You're just a bunch of phonies taking up a bunch of unnecessary time squabbling about nothing," shouted Vander Zalm.

"You're the most horrible opposition this country has ever seen."

Howard kept his temper, more or less, but charged that government house leader Garde Gardom had lied to the opposition.

The corridor confrontation followed a half-hour procedural argument over the government changing the order in which bills are called for debate.

NDP forestry critic Bill King asked for more time to study technical amendments to the Forestry Act before the bill was called. He was refused.

Under the rules of the house, King loses his right to speak in debate on the bill. He rejected the government offer to give him leave to debate the bill anyway.

"I'm not going to grovel to this government if they haven't the basic decency to respect parliamentary tradition."

Outside, Vander Zalm and Howard continued their snarling match for several minutes, with Vander Zalm doing most of the talking.

"Why should you worry about what comes up? It's all the peoples' business," he snapped.

"The truth of it is, half your guys wanted to take off this afternoon. That's why the house was nearly half empty when we adjourned.

"Stick around like the government members. The NDP should be at work like the rest of us."

The minister's fast delivery left Howard sputtering, barely able to get an insult in edgewise.

Government whip George Mussellem, meanwhile, admitted he had been late drawing up the usual daily list of bills to be debated. When he had it ready, after the day's sitting had already begun, the NDP refused to accept it.

Howard, who was standing nearby, commented: "You're worse than Gardom."

This was the second corridor shouting match of the legislative session. In March, Health Minister Rafe Mair went head-to-head and nose-to-nose with Howard over NDP allegations of Socred hankypanky with electoral boundaries.

That confrontation featured some plain and fancy swearing and the offer by one member to punch the other in the nose.

The offer was declined.

It has been many years since actual fisticuffs occurred in the legislative precinct. However, as the session wears on, through the long, hot summer the chance increases for this variety of one-on-one debate.

Junk 'massive energy saver'

VANCOUVER (CP) — As the aircraft carrier HMCS Bonaventure was towed into the sunset in 1971, Canadians thought it was the last they'd see of the floating white elephant.

They were wrong.

Japan has returned much of the former Canadian warship piece by piece, in the form of Datsuns, Toyotas and Hondas.

Japanese automobiles sold in Canada contain recycled steel from the carrier, says Sheridan Lax, president of the Canadian Association of Recycling Industries.

He said in an interview Tuesday that the Bonaventure is a good example of how recycling can save energy and money by using scrap metal for new products.

The federal government sold the Bonaventure for scrap in 1971 after a lengthy controversy over the vessel's $13-million refit in 1967. It was originally the 20,000-ton British carrier, Powerful, but was not completed until Canada bought it and changed the name. Bonaventure originally cost Canada $18 million in 1957.

Vancouver businessman Bill Kennedy bought the decommissioned Bonaventure for $750,000 and immediately resold it to Mitsui Scrap yards in Taiwan. Scrap from the yard is a source of steel for Japanese auto makers.

"A junkyard is a metal mine above the ground," said Lax, here for the recycling association's annual convention.

Consumers should regard junkyards "not as a blister in their community but as a necessary asset from the environmental and ecological view, he said.

Lax said massive amounts of energy can be conserved by recycling waste products. Recycling aluminum uses only five per cent of the energy needed to process bauxite into aluminum and making products from scrap paper uses one-third as much energy as making them from virgin pulp.

And the five million tons of scrap steel Canadian companies recycle each year saves eight million barrels of oil, enough fuel to run more than one million automobiles for a year, he said.

Museum plans open house

Where can you spend a leisurely couple of hours panning for gold, beachcombing or watching native Indian carvers at work?

The Provincial Museum during International Museum Day on Thursday.

Gold panning techniques, tidal pool lectures and carving demonstrations are just some of the activities planned by museum staff during a special open house between 3-5 p.m. and 7-9 p.m.

Museum curators will be on hand to answer questions and give short lectures on their departments.

They will deal with topics ranging from life at the turn of the century to identification of small mammals that inhabit B.C.

They also will explain how exhibits are built, give taxidermy demonstrations and show how archeologists work at digs.

Newcombe Audtitorium will have a continuous showing of films related to the museum.

Water: Victoria won't run dry

The rest of the the province faces a bone-dry summer with possible drought conditions created by low water levels in British Columbia's rivers, but Victoria has lots of the stuff.

Water commissioner Ron Upward said Tuesday Greater Victoria won't suffer.

The district depends on winter rainfall, not melting snow pack, for water supplies. Upward said heavy rains in December filled the water district's reservoirs with enough for a 12-month supply.

It's going to be a dry year in most of the province, with scanty April rainfall and mountain snow pack well below average.

The May 1 bulletin published by the ministry of environment said that unseasonably warm weather last month melted more snow than usual, swelling rivers with runoff that ordinarily comes later in the spring.

This early runoff means that for the rest of May and into June, the Peace, middle Fraser South Thompson and Okanagan river systems will have "extremely light volume."

Drought is already prevalent in the Cariboo and parts of north-central B.C., the bulletin said.

Mountain snow pack on the south coast and Vancouver Island is also well below average, 61 per cent and 71 per cent of normal levels, respectively.

Newspaper on TV screen?

Newspapers eventually will be read at home on television-type computers, Globe and Mail executive editor Cameron Smith said in Victoria Tuesday.

He said subscribers will have a wide choice of what they want to call up on their screens, from just the headlines to in-depth articles.

A menu would be available listing the choices.

Smith made the comments in a speech to the Canadian Information Processing Society.

Meanwhile, the conventional newspaper still has a good future as long as it changes to meet specific needs rather than continuing to try to be all things to all people, he said.

Publishers would have to learn what readers want and must concentrate on supplying those needs.

Because of escalating costs, it was no longer feasible to supply information that might not be of interest to readers.

A newspaper might find it more profitable to split into three smaller ones in order to meet specific needs.

Smith is co-ordinating his newspaper's program to have the Globe and Mail printed in Calgary and Montreal as well as Toronto through the use of laser beam technology.

View Royal fire calls change

View Royal would like Esquimalt to take over the dispatch system for its fire department.

The View Royal fire protection district currently shares a dispatch system with several municipalities but faces loss of that system because other municipalities are withdrawing.

Esquimalt council's fire committee will consider the request.

View Royal averages about 66 fire calls a year and pays $145 a month for its share of the cost of the current dispatch system which operates through a commercial telephone answering service. Alternatives are expected to cost more.

By the time the new hospital on Helmcken Road opens hospital officials want the View Royal fire department to process its calls through a municipal office such as Esquimalt's.

Young People's Festival flourishes

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A plant that took root under the colorful tents of the Vancouver Heritage Festival of 1978 has flourished and is now spreading its benefits throughout the province.

It's the British Columbia Festival for Young People, and this year it's in Victoria for the first of what the McPherson Foundation hopes will be an annual occasion.

Minstrel Raffi started things off earlier this month and Sharon, Lois and Bram were part of it at the beginning of this week.

Starting today at the McPherson, Green Thumb Players and Carousel Theatre of Vancouver, and Sukay of Bolivia are entertaining audiences from tots to family groups through Friday evening.

"Next year, we are planning a full week of festival with an even greater range," McPherson executive-director John Dyck said.

The young people's festival is now attracting international attention, says its co-ordinator, Ernie Fedell. Green Thumb has two shows at present touring Britain and Germany and Carousel toured abroad last year. In B.C. the festival is visiting such widely separated points as Terrace, Smithers and Campbell River.

Canada Council, which only a year ago recognized the professional status of children's theatre, is a sponsor through its Touring Office. So is the Secretary of State department, the B.C. Lotteries Fund and Vancouver Foundation.

Fedell says the festival has been assisted in organization by Victoria's Kaleidoscope Theatre which is participating in the current B.C. tour.

Carousel's Sandy Tucker who plays Ellie, the young girl adjusting to the presence of a stepmother in the play, Step On a Crack, says the festival productions show clearly how children's theatre is changing.

"Fairy tales can be read and seen on television. This is theatre that creates for the now and the future, dealing often with situations children actually experience," she says.

She speaks for the group when she says that, as professional actors, they have chosen the area of children's theatre because children offer an ideal audience.

"They're not like adults who sit back and say 'entertain me'. They participate, they respond. If you, the actor, believe, they believe. But you can't fool them with anything shoddy or phoney."

John Carroll is a one-man show for Greenthumb Players. In Portrait of the Adult as a Kid, he uses anecdotes and song plus a pet mosquito, Gomer, for an excursion through childhood that has brought him hundreds of letters from his young audiences.

"They treat me as a close friend on a one-to-one basis," he says. "They call me 'the kid' when they write to me or ask to talk to me."

Responses, the whole group agrees, are a powerful guide to the child mind and how they view their world. "We get everything — laughter, tears, questions — and they love experimental theatre. It has a special appeal for young people," says Carousel's Wendy Gorling.

Carousel is performing Step On a Crack at 9:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. daily; Green Thumb is doing Portrait of the Adult as a Young Kid at 11 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. (both for ages five to 12) and Sukay is performing its magical rhythmic music on fascinating Bolivian instruments at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m.

Exuberant members of the Carousel Theatre and Green Thumb players run to the McPherson

Robert Houle quit over federal policy of keeping Indian art on storage shelves

Indian makes it to the top, but art's filed as rummage

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Until a few months ago, Robert Houle thought of himself as living proof that an Indian can succeed if he masters the rules of white society. It was a fine illusion while it lasted.

By nature, the 32-year-old Ojibway is not a troublemaker. Shy, well-educated and polite, he has none of the bearing of a rebel.

But something inside him snapped this spring. It happened one ordinary day when he walked into the storage room of the museum where he'd worked for three years. He stared — for the thousandth time — at the Canadian government's collection of 1,500 pieces of Indian art treasures, lying there collecting dust. Suddenly, he couldn't stand it any longer.

Right then, he quit his lucrative job as curator of Contemporary Indian Art at the National Museum of Man and told his shocked employer he was tired of seeing the cultural outpouring of Canada's native people relegated to back rooms and neglected alcoves.

"I don't mean to upset people. I just had to do what I felt was right. And it hurt. It was one of the hardest things I've ever done," he told FP News Service.

The words come out slowly; in careful, calculated tones. They almost sound rehearsed.

And they might be. Houle is clearly telling his story for one reason alone — it was speak out or sell out.

At 29, he thought he was the luckiest Indian in Canada.

He had a degree in art history from the University of Manitoba and a post-graduate degree in art education from McGill University. He'd studied drawing and painting in Salzberg, Austria, and on his arrival back in Montreal, easily snared two jobs, teaching North American art history at both McGill and Concordia universities. As well, his own paintings were attracting respectful attention from the Canadian art community.

Then came the highest tribute of all. In 1977, he was invited by the National Museums Corporation, the agency in charge of all federal museums and art galleries, to become its first curator of contemporary Indian art. Houle was the first native ever to hold a curator's post.

"It looked like an ideal job. Indian art is the most exciting field there is. The painting being done today by native people is a visual documentation of our adaption to Canadian life."

Eagerly, Houle set to work shopping — from the sophisticated art galleries to the ramshackle workshops of the backwoods.

The museum now boasts a $1-million collection of modern Indian art — 700 Northwest Coast Indian prints, 500 Woodland Indian prints, 100 paintings and drawings (including two of Houle's own works) and various engravings, wall hangings and sculptures.

Houle's face opens up proudly when he talks about the collection, then lapses back into closed sullenness when he is forced to add that exactly 11 works are now on public display in a 12-by-six-foot room in an inconspicuous second-floor corner of the museum.

The rest, including Misquah, a vivid wall-sized painting into which he poured his own heart seven years ago, are buried in the storage room.

As far as Houle knows, they'll remain there indefinitely. The National Art Gallery won't display Indian art. "They're too busy exhibiting ancient works of Communist China and folk art from Africa."

In fact, he says, the art gallery has a policy of not devoting space to contemporary Indian art. The reason, he has been told, is that Indian art belongs in a museum.

"I'm beginning to feel like an artifact myself. I don't want to use the word discrimination — that's too strong. But I'm deeply opposed to the way they (the National Museums Corporation) seem to think art produced by Indians is interesting only as a relic of a by-gone era.

"By refusing to collect modern Indian art, the gallery is saying 'we'll treat you as Indians first and artists second.'"

At first, Houle was convinced the policy was an inadvertant mistake. If he just pointed out how unfair the system was, somebody would fix it.

So he complained. His superiors seemed to be listening, but months turned into years and nothing ever changed. Each time he'd acquire a striking new work of art, it would end up in the storage room, just like all the others.

On April 2, Houle handed in his resignation, effective the end of this month.

He doesn't have any worries about his own livelihood. He can go back to teaching and do some painting on the side. At his last exhibition in Toronto in February, his works sold for between $650 and $1,500.

Houle tells acquaintances that he's looking forward to the change. He says he got so tangled up in the red tape of being a bureaucrat that his creative juices seemed to run in the last few months. But the words sound forced.

They are, he admits. "Underneath all my complaints, I know it was a worthwhile experience. I hope to God I'll be replaced and I hope my replacement will be an Indian. I wish him or her luck. I hope I've done some good."

He fumbles to light a cigarette, smiles shyly and seems relieved that his story is finally out.

So far, Houle has shared his tale with only a handful of people. Each re-telling is agonizing. It's not easy learning to be a rebel at 32 in grey flannels.

Spray unwittingly allowed

WINNIPEG (UPC) — City councillors unwittingly allowed Winnipeg residents to be used as guinea pigs when they approved a seemingly innocuous request in 1953 from the United States to spray the city.

Minutes of Winnipeg city council's meeting of Feb. 2, 1953 show that councillors approved a defence department request to allow U.S. army officials to spray the city with zinc cadmium sulfide.

Councillors were told the tests were "to discover the behavior of smoke in built-up areas," and that they would involve "the release of small quantities of harmless fluorescent powder at varying intervals in the city."

Newspaper reports from June 1953 indicate the public was told the $35,000 experiment was aimed at learning whether it was practical to cover cities with a smoke screen to hide vital installations from enemy bombers.

But information released from Washington last weekend revealed a more sinister agenda.

The information, released under the U.S. Freedom of Information Act, showed the army wanted to spray the chemical in Winnipeg to test ways of distributing chemical and biological warfare agents.

A department of national defence spokesman in Ottawa confirmed the reports, saying the aerial spraying in 1953 of zinc cadmium sulphide, which he described as an "inert, nontoxic substance," had been common knowledge in the Manitoba capital at the time.

Maj. Lee Delorme, a public affairs officer for the U.S. Army in Washington, D.C., says 14 zinc cadmium sulphide tests were conducted between July 9 and September 1953.

He says the chemical was sprayed at ground level and from a balloon to compare dissemination rates.

"Certainly the federal and the municipal and the provincial emergency measures organizations were fully aware and cooperated in the conduct of these trials," said the Canadian defence spokesman.

"In fact, the population of Winnipeg was fully aware of exactly what was going on at the time — that this particular chemical was being used and that it was being sprayed in the atmosphere. Over a period of time, these tests were observed by the public at large and certain information provided at that time."

Prof. Frank LaBella of the University of Manitoba's pharmacology department, said both cadmium and zinc are toxic and could be dangerous to babies, old peoople, asthma patients, and sick persons.

Zinc cadmium sulphide was used because it sticks to everything it lands on, making it easy to trace.

The chemical is used in many detergents because it reflects light and makes clothing look brighter than it is. It is also a component in riot gas because it will not blow away.

Douglas Campbell, premier of Manitoba in 1953, says he doesn't recall the experiment but would be amazed if such testing was conducted without letting provincial officials know the true nature of the experiment.

"It's almost unbelievable they would be trying such a thing in a populated area," said Campbell.

MP denies hazard

OTTAWA (CP) — Sensational reporting about the spraying of an aerosol substance over Winnipeg in 1953 is creating a needless and cruel fear among residents of that city, a government spokesman said Tuesday.

MP Ursula Appolloni added that the defence department is preparing a detailed explanation of the program.

Mrs. Appolloni, parliamentary secretary for the absent Defence Minister Gilles Lamontagne, also denied in the Commons suggestions the spraying posed threats to human health or that it was conducted in secret.

The comments resulted from a question by New Democrat Terry Sargeant of the Manitoba riding of Selkirk-Interlake who asked whether there would be a full-scale inquiry into the program.

The government wants to assure people there was no great danger, she said.

The tests took place 27 years ago and many of the "people who were alive at that time have since retired or, unfortunately. . . ."

"Are dead," yelled several Tories.

"Many of the people involved in the tests at that time have since retired or unfortunately — for other reasons — have passed away," she said.

As the opposition groaned she added: "It's a sad comment on life, but we all have to go sometime."

Canada pledges more for NATO's spending

BRUSSELS (AP) — Canada gave full support Tuesday to U.S.-sponsored military measures to counter the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and pledged to meet NATO's goal of increasing defence spending by three per cent or more.

Defence Minister J. Gilles Lamontagne made the pledge during a NATO defence ministers' meeting dominated by the crisis in Afghanistan.

"There's no reason why we can't meet the three-per-cent goal," Lamontagne told a news conference. "We're not married (to it) but we are engaged."

Because of Canada's recent change of government, next year's budget has not been set, but Lamontagne said that if the 1979 defence appropriations are carried over, the three-per-cent goal will be reached.

"Afghanistan has sensitized . . . Parliament to the need for (such) measures," Lamontagne said.

He said Canada is also willing to help other NATO countries aid the alliance's poorest members, Turkey and Portugal.

Canada would contribute to Portugal's request for aid in buying three frigates and plans to help Turkey modernize engines and other parts for military airplanes — a program expected to cost Canada $25 million.

Canada currently has about 5,000 soldiers stationed in western Europe and Lamontagne said they would remain there to augment the 300,000 U.S. troops assigned to Europe.

Teenagers trap, beat Pakistanis

TORONTO (CP) — In what police say was a racially-motivated attack, 10 teenagers beat a Pakistani family with fists, boots and broken bottles in an apartment elevator Monday night.

"It was an absolutely unprovoked and disgusting incident," Staff Superintendent Jack Webster said Tuesday.

Amir Din, 33, and his wife, Tasneen, 26, cowered defenceless on the floor, shielding their two sons, aged four and five, with their own bodies as a 13-year-old girl cut off their escape by pressing a button to hold open the elevator door.

The family was surrounded in the lobby as they returned from shopping. Din said the youths shouted obscenities and racial insults, then kicked his wife as she hustled the children into the elevator.

As the gang punched Din in the face, he dropped groceries including a six-bottle case of soft drinks, he said later.

Flood leaves town strong

MORRIS, Man. (UPC) — The flood that threatened the existence of this southern Manitoba town last spring has helped make it stronger, both spiritually and economically.

At the height of last spring's flood — the worst of the century — the only people who remained were a few stubborn residents and military personnel manning the dikes.

While the Red River was at its height, Morris became an oasis in reverse — a circle of houses surrounded by a sea of brown water.

But the dikes held and the floodwaters subsided and now the residents of this town of 1,800 say their community is stronger than ever.

"A year ago," said Eva Kroeker, "people thought, 'how could anyone be so crazy?' I would say this town is booming more than ever.

"I think a flood like that helps bring people together — for survival."

She works in the local MacLeod's store, where the new owner, Terry Terichow, agrees about the changed outlook of local residents.

"We came here simply because the dike held," he said. "We were negotiating with the previous owner at the time the flood came. We were just watching, and when the dikes held we figured, 'what's the big deal?'"

Terichow said the community is attracting farmers from the surrounding areas who would rather move to town than shore up their private fortresses in time of floods.

That, plus an influx of commuters from Winnipeg, 50 kilometers to the north, should provide the basis for a strong town economy, Terichow believes.

Bob Mason, who operates Alwood Lumber Sales on the south side of town, agrees that Morris is poised for growth, waiting for interest rates to go down a little further.

His firm is ready to go on housing construction and while there have been some firm inquiries, nothing has been signed yet.

"I would think that by June rates should be down ... When that happens people will move ahead — people can't just sit."

Laurence Petroni, president of the local Chamber of Commerce, sees a bright future for his town, which didn't even have a Chamber three years ago.

Now there's a shipping mall under construction and a large Cargill Grain elevator in the works.

"There's still a lot of land available, but all in all the town is growing," he said.

"The flood ... it always hurts a little bit ... Nobody likes to leave home. But the dikes have always held in Morris — and always will."

Farmers not paid for delivered grain

OTTAWA (CP) — It appears that Prairie farmers have not been paid for $28 million worth of wheat they delivered to country elevators during the last five years, Bill McKnight (PC — Kindersley-Lloydminister, Sask.) says.

McKnight told the Commons that since the 1973-74 crop year, elevators had not returned to farmers money deducted for overages. That occurs when the elevators incorrectly weigh wheat delivered by a producer or dock him too much for cleaning the grain.

Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said he was unaware of the situation but would check.

McKnight said in an interview that it didn't appear the elevators were deliberately shortchanging farmers. He said it appeared to be "the way business is done" but it was unclear as to why the money was no longer being returned to farmers.

Prairies need rain

ESTEVAN (CP) — Farmers in parched southern Saskatchewan need rain badly.

"If we don't get rain in the next week to 10 days, we'll have a critical situation on our hands," Pat Gerwing, Estevan's agricultural representative, said this week.

"Livestock producers are concerned about pastures and hay supply."

Alfalfa and hay crops have grown to only about half their normal level for this time of year because of dry conditions.

Fears of a drought are having their effect on the sale of crop insurance and the price of grain futures in the commodity market.

E. A. Tatching, general manager of the provincial hail and crop insurance program based in Lacombe, Alta., says there have been 2,210 new applicants for the basic all-risk policy of the program. In addition, many farmers have obtained hay and pasture protection.

He said this year's demand for policies is about 50 per cent higher than in 1978 and 1979.

Helmet law upheld

ESTEVAN, Sask. (CP) — Saskatchewan's mandatory safety helmet legislation for motorcyclists was upheld Friday in Estevan provincial court.

Judge Robert Lee found Trygve Kittelson, 73, of Bromhead, Sask, guilty of not wearing a helmet while riding a motorcycle on a public highway last July 23 and fined him $20.

Lee disagreed with the argument that the legislation infringed on a person's rights and freedom of choice.

Houses repaired

SOUTH INDIAN LAKE, Man. (CP) — The bill to repair 35 deteriorating houses here will come to about half the cost of building them in the first place, a Manitoba government official said Thursday.

Floors in some of the four-year-old houses are rotting and walls have buckled. Residents who were forced to move here when their old townsite was flooded for a hydro-electric project say making repairs may be futile because the foundations of the homes are poorly designed.

The residents say the problem stems partly from building the houses on soft, poorly-drained ground.

School study urged

ELKHORN, Man. (CP) — Some local residents are looking for ways to ensure more grass-roots control of education in the Fort La Bosse School Division.

But a proposal raised by Reston, Man. businessman Ben Kroeker — a $55,000 study to find out what education changes local parents want — faces some hurdles.

Ron MacIntosh, Manitoba's deputy minister of education, said Friday he thought that the school division might be segmented under the proposal.

The division was involved earlier this year in a student boycott following an announcement that high school classes would not be offered this fall at Elkhorn.

The boycott began March 10 and ended about a month later when the board pledged to postpone indefinitely any plans to curtail classes at Elkhorn.

Conflict of interest

ELIE, Man. (CP) — A municipal official who supervised rezoning of land in which he held an interest and sold it for more than $100,000 profit says he acted for the good of the community.

"Council wanted certain things and they had to get done somehow. So I did it," says Andre Carriere, secretary-treasurer of the rural municipality of Cartier, west of Winnipeg.

Documents at the provincial land titles office in Portage la Prairie show Carriere and a partner bought 30 acres of land on the southern edge of Elie in April, 1978, for $37,500.

Nine days later, they transferred title to a company in the neighboring village of Newton Siding, Man., for $142,000.

Manitoba has no laws governing conflict-of-interest for municipal employees.

Trudeau's pork barrel largesse again a secret

By JOHN FERGUSON

OTTAWA (CP) — The Trudeau government has reverted to secrecy in filling more than 300 vacancies in full- and part-time federal jobs ranging from the high-profile chairman of Air Canada to citizenship judges and regulatory boards.

The Progressive Conservative government of Joe Clark last year had begun unwrapping the mystery from the selection process by releasing detailed lists of more than 1,200 federal positions showing the incumbent and salary range.

But Trudeau's office now refuses to release the lists of vacancies for the jobs — known as order-in-council appointments — that for years have been an integral part of the Liberal patronage system for rewarding party faithful.

Officials in the prime minister's office concede the secrecy appears to contradict a commitment from Trudeau shortly after forming a government in March that he would stick by the same rules on access to information that had been applied by the Clark government.

"That's the way the system is now," said an official in Trudeau's office, explaining the lists would not be released.

The appointments are at the discretion of cabinet and include senators, judges, ambassadors, directors of of Crown corporations and members of federal regulatory agencies that together have a extensive impact on the lives of individuals and businesses.

These agencies help decide, for example, the price of a telephone and an airline or train ticket. They set regulations governing the safety of interprovincial buses and trucks. They have a major role in setting farm prices and determining subsidies, they decide whether a convict should be paroled and they listen to grievances from veterans over their pensions, to name just a few.

The lists of the positions take up four inch-thick volumes released last year by Jean Pigott, the former Conservative MP who was responsible for order-in-council appointments in Clark's office.

Pigott launched a head-hunting program that involved computerizing more than 5,000 personal files sent to her office and interviews with senior officials to get an idea what type of person was needed.

"I interviewed the chief citizenship court judge and asked what kind of person she needed," Pigott says. "She said to me 'no one has ever asked me that before.'"

Pigott took some heat from the party after the Conservative defeat for not having moved quickly enough in making appointments.

Trudeau was not deterred from making appointments after he had called the May 22 election last year. Within a few days he appointed more than a dozen faithful Liberals.

For example, Gerard Loiselle, longtime Liberal MP for the Montreal riding of St. Henri, was given a 10-year appointment to the immigration appeal board by Trudeau when he lost part of his riding in distribution. The salary range of the job is $33,600-$46,200 a year.

Total ban placed on Alta. campfires

The Canadian Press

Campers heading to any Alberta provincial park this holiday weekend better be prepared to eat cold wieners because all open fires including stoves and charcoal barbeques are banned.

Although the number of forest fires burning in the province dropped to 31 Tuesday from 45 Monday, the fire hazard is still extreme.

What's needed is a good, soaking rain but none is in sight and the weather office has predicted more warm temperatures, low humidities and gusty winds through the Victoria Day weekend.

Forestry officials were worried by a forecast calling for dry lightning storms late Tuesday which could touch off fires along the foothills and in the Grande Prairie area.

Hikers heading to Banff National Park also won't be issued fire permits for the back country this weekend.

As of Tuesday, two fires in Alberta were out of control and one was under partial control.

The fire — covering about 700,000 acres in Alberta and Saskatchewan — has reinvaded Alberta after spreading east across the Saskatchewan border.

The blaze originally started 190 kilometres northeast of Fort McMurray and spread into Saskatchewan south of Lake Athabasca.

A crew of 50 firefighters aided by three helicopters were mopping up the 350,000 acres burning on Alberta's side Tuesday.

Keith Gorham, a Saskatchewan forestry official, said the problem is the flames don't die down at night the way forest fires usually do.

"This one burns fairly briskly all night and really gets going in the afternoon," Gorham said.

A finger of the fire whipped back across the Alberta border Monday and by Tuesday was 280 acres and out of control. A crew of 50 firefighters and four helicopters were fighting it.

More than 300 firefighters were fighting a 202,000-acre fire at Winefred Lake fire which started in the Cold Lake Air Weapons Range.

Roger Goodman, forestry communications officer, said it's a "dirty burn" which didn't consume all the fuel at once and now is burning over previously blackened areas.

Schreyer back in bed

OTTAWA (CP) — Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer entered hospital Tuesday to prepare for intestinal surgery Thursday, Government House said.

The operation, a follow-up to one he had for an inflamed intestine in February, was postponed last week so Schreyer could attend the funeral of Josip Broz Tito, president of Yugoslavia.

Drought crisis looms across arid Prairies

By ROD EDWARDS
The Canadian Press

The spectre of drought is slowly taking form in grey veils of dust rising with the breeze over parched prairie fields.

Some would say it's here already, particularly farmers and ranchers in areas that have been without rain for more than 50 days and have little hope of any in the immediate future.

Governments, too, are becoming alarmed at the situation and Agriculture Minister Gordon MacMurchy of Saskatchewan says meetings are being planned between federal and provincial officials to deal with the drought potential.

But in the meantime, dry conditions are adding to serious financial problems many farmers are encountering due to high interest on money borrowed to plant spring crops that could be ruined by drought.

Ranchers in areas of southwestern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta are looking bleakly at dried-out grazing land that in many cases wouldn't recover even with heavy rain.

To help the ranchers, some provincial governments are looking at emergency programs to bring feed to range cattle if the situation gets worse, and to bring in water to fill depleted dugouts.

Bans have been placed on open fires in attempts to curb the many outbreaks of forest and brush fires that have been a direct result of the extreme dryness.

"We're getting to the stage where it could start to get serious," Al Martin, crops branch chief with the Manitoba department of agriculture.

I've sort of set a May 15th benchmark," Martin said in an interview.

"That seems to be kind of a turning point."

Martin said the critical stage is the last two weeks of May. Heavy rain will be needed then to avoid trouble.

His concerns were shared by Bob Nelson, head of the cereals, and oil seeds division in the Alberta department of agriculture.

"Normally we're looking at about 27 centimetres during the last six weeks but this year some areas haven't had any."

Seeding in Alberta ranges from 25 per cent to 70 per cent completed in various districts but ranchers are hardest hit by the lack of rain.

"Even if we got rain now, this year's yield will be reduced by about a third," Nelson said.

Some ranchers are already supplementing cattle feed with hay, a practice which isn't normal for this time of year.

In Saskatchewan, MacMurchy said the province's drought committee is being revived and one of its first chores will be to catalogue feed sources for hard-pressed ranchers.

Al Church of Winnipeg, general manager of the Manitoba Cattle Producers Association, said the conditions are extremely serious for grazing prospects but there hasn't been a large movement of cattle on the market.

Manitoba's pastures have different characteristics, Church said, and they grow much later.

"My only experience on a comparable year was way back in 1961."

"In 1961 alfalfa fields around Winnipeg had cracks in them six inches wide and it wasn't safe to walk across them. That to me is getting pretty serious but we're about a month away from a crisis situation now."

'Canada' Day shot down again

OTTAWA (CP) — A chorus of Progressive Conservatives shouted down a Liberal attempt to change the name of the July 1 holiday from Dominion Day to Canada Day.

Maurice Dionne of the New Brunswick constituency of Northumberland-Miramichi received applause from his fellow Liberals when he attempted to move a motion under which the Commons would direct that July 1 be known as Canada Day.

The Conservatives denied the unanimous consent necessary to move the motion.

Periodically one Liberal or another tries to have the name of the holiday changed. Always there is a strong Conservative opposition to the idea.

Beefs over ads lack a courtroom

MONTREAL (CP) — The yes side's complaint against federal advertising campaigns during the sovereignty-association referendum race became a case in search of a court Tuesday.

After Quebec Superior Court ruled early on Tuesday that it was not within its jurisdiction to accept a petition for an injunction against the advertising, Pierre-Olivier Boucher, the province's director of party financing, took his case before the special council created to rule on alleged abuses of the law governing campaign financing.

Jean-Pierre Lussier, the lawyer for financing director Boucher, said outside the courtroom he is uncertain what his next move will be if the council decides not to hear the complaint.

Boucher cited what he called subtle and not-so-subtle pro-federalist propaganda in an anti-drinking campaign on billboards, in television advertising and pamphlets inserted with family allowance cheques, as well as ads promoting various government services and travel in Canada.

Ryan fights on, stolid but brilliant

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

MONTREAL — He touches the heart and the wallet. He toys with the notion of violence to come, he damns a popular francophone tabloid and he mocks the Parti Quebecois' notion of monetary union with dire scenarios.

Next morning, a major radio station reports only that Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan says that sovereignty-association is like having your cake and eating it too. End of the news item. A typical Ryan campaign day — but then Quebecers have heard it all before.

And so it goes on this final last-week stagger toward the referendum finish line. The man who would be winner is bone tired. His lean face has sunk into gray pouches and grayer lines. His words spill out fast and then faster but the voice is smudged and dull. You can tell he's groping for passion only because his voice and his hands are raised.

He's a patrician with a cranky temper, an austere public man with easy private charm, a facinating politician who can command respect even when he leaves them yawning in the aisles, a bizzare mixture of the sublime and the ever-so-slightly sleazy. And he clearly thinks he's going to win the May 20 sweepstakes.

If Ryan does slide over the 50 percent total, then he has triumphed almost in spite of himself. His odd notions on grassroots campaigning have thrown traditional methods of journalistic coverage into a tizzy.

Instead of hurling his best lines into the television camras at 4 p.m. — in tine for the evening newscast — Ryan carefully hordes them until he is the ninth of 12 speakers at a late, late evening rally. In a way, it's rather admirable. He feels it's his campaign — not the media's. He wants to reach as many people as possible personally. He lets local No Commitees man the platforms and set the agendas. So he crisscrosses the province daily at an inprobable pace tied to an impossible schedule. And he's usually slightly late for almost everything.

On the platform, he's stolid. At his best, his arguments topple out in a low key rational monotone. He provokes laughter with deadly mockery, coaxing the crowds to deride the Parti Quebecois like a professor taunting the foolishness of student rebels.

But then the man who has just lauded individual liberty can suddenly erupt with the strident charge that the Journal de Montreal is a "rag" and a "garbage can". The man who talked of brotherly co-operation can abuptly switch to veiled warnings about diminished social security payments in an independant Quebec before an audience of largely senior citizens.

It's a strange blend of appeals based on dollars and sense, a grab-bag of logic and threats and patriotism and patronage.

Take Monday, an average day on the Ryan scramble across his land. The Liberal leader begins with an open line show at which a caller asks if the referendum results could trigger a Northern Ireland-type situation. Ryan takes the high road but he says that the "germs" of violence are being sown. A tidy veiled warning. Yet when an American reporter pursues that explosive notion later the politician brusquely refuses to talk.

Back-to-back private interviews consume much of the afternoon. By 5:30 p.m. he's mingling with a committee of doctors for the No in a posh downtown hotel. Ryan shares his platform with an all-star cast — several prominant doctors and two portly federal cabinet ministers. Aware that he will never be spellbinding and anxious to prove that No support crosses all traditional party lines, the Liberal leader usually collects a clutch of willing orators — such as former Union Nationale candidates — at every stop.

Two weeks ago, the 14th speaker at a rally asked for a round of applause for listeners who had been standing at the back of the hall for two hours, absorbing harangues from folks ranging from the head of the school board to the local MP. Ryan was 15th on the bill.

Ryan waxes sombre for the doctors on the marvels of federal opportunities and liberties. Then he suddenly tells them: "Perhaps the tendency to rapid socialization was a bit premature and needs redressing in the years to come." Its all in the name of individual liberty, of course. And the doctors are beaming.

On to southwest Quebec, to another packed rally in another smokey auditorium. Ryan begins just before 10 p.m. His best line of the day — "What will be the value of the Parizeau Quebecois?" (His title for any new currency divised by Quebec Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau) — arrives around 10:40 p.m. No one gets back to Montreal until 12:30 in Tuesday morning.

Then he tackles the PQ plans for a single currency run by a four-member committee and overseen by a joint board from the two nations. He paints ludicrous scenarios; imagine that a foriegn exchange problem needs immediate action and it goes to the committee which disagrees so it goes to the board and then those members consult the Quebec and Canadian goverments and then they consult their officials and then they argue it out.

"The fire would have been dead for a week by the time they agree," he reasons. The crowd crows with laughter. They have followed their clever lecturer's logic and they are all nodding and grinning and stifling their yawns.

But that cameo never made the television news and barely tumbled into the morning papers and scarcely touched the radio newscast. It's a stubborn style. It's tiring. It's old style patronage and new style take-it-to-the-people. And no matter what the results on May 20, between Ryan's dull monotone and his infrequent eruptions, he has somehow managed to include a little something for everyone in this one man crusade.

Carlin: comedy back after drought

New York Times

NEW YORK — George Carlin, he of the sharp tongue and mild manner, was chatting about comedy the other day, and the idea came through that it is not so much that he has caught up with the times as that the times have caught up with him.

The 41-year-old Carlin, who has been plying the comic's trade since the late 1960s, was on the phone from Los Angeles before enplaning for the East. He is an easy talker, needing nothing more to prime the pump than a "What's new?"

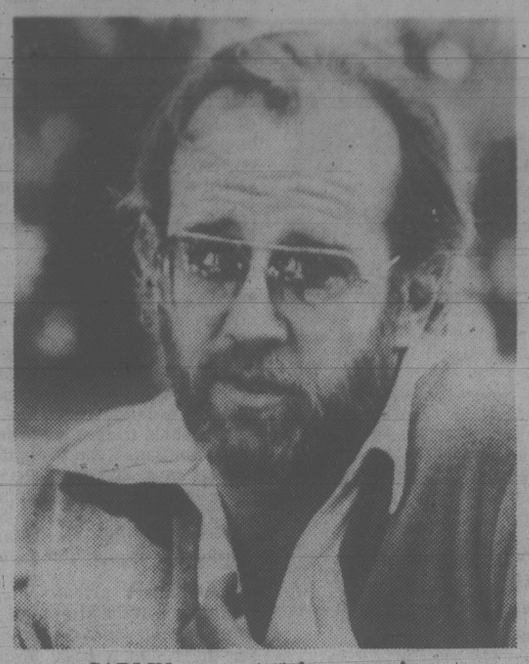
"I'm force feeding new material into the first part of the show," he said. "For a long time, I've laid on certain subjects. I've done them often and they've changed as I've done them, and the routines are different from the way they were done two years ago. But now I have done new material, and I find that that gets me more excited."

Carlin is a comedian who ... well, it's hard to say. He does funny takeoffs on television newscasts, on hair, on many things that line the course of our lives but that most of us rarely reflect upon. He loves words, and he regards all words as equal. He uses socially outcast words in some routines, and while this may titillate his listeners (it titillated the Federal Communications Commission into reprimanding New York radio station WBAI-FM for playing, at a time when children might be listening, a Carlin record that contained a bit called Seven Little Words, about words banned from the airwaves), he treats words with the reverence of an etymologist who has a robust humor. Just words.

"What kind of audiences listen to me? I really resist making such generalizations. I don't believe in crystallizing them in that way. I do think that there is more acceptance today for more different kinds of comedy than there used to be. You can raise any subject, as long as you handle it nicely, as long as it's in a framework they understand."

Comedy is back after a long drought, according to Carlin's reading of the situation.

"The underground and counterculture seem to be changed. There are still issues-oriented people, but people are not throwing their bodies in the streets. A lot of what was underground has been absorbed, as America does to everything good, sucks it in, homogenizes it, makes it into something of a mishmash. There are still comedians who are less acceptable, like myself and Richard Pryor. But we're not like Lenny Bruce, who stood alone.



CARLIN . . . note-taker, organizer

"In the early 1970s, comedy didn't grow. Rock grew. It was a more efficient expression for feelings that people had. But in the late 70s, comedy started to come along again. You had Animal House and Saturday Night Live. I think I see comedy now as a freer form. The comic has greater latitude."

So, what else is new? First of all, there is the movie. The movie that has never been made, called The Illustrated George Carlin.

"I've had trouble getting the money. It's not going anywhere now, but I'm planning to get it out as a cable-television comedy movie. I don't know what I'm talking about, but I'll do it. I have been doing a cable-television show each year for two years for Home Box Office. But this will be my own production, outside of the studios. I want to keep it under my control. I have avoided movies because I'm not an actor. I'm a writer and a personality, but I'm like a fish out of water as an actor."

No big commercial television deals. Carlin said he's talked enough developmental deals with networks, enough to persuade him that those executives are not the ones he cares to work with or for.

"I do like going on the Tonight show. I'll be host on it three times this month. I give them something they can use, and they give me something I can use."

Doesn't what television writers used to call the bottomless maw of the medium use up material at one gulp, making it indigestible for future consumption because it repeats?

"If you do something the audience likes, they don't mind hearing it again. You use a judicious combination of new things, so they know you're trying, and old material."

These days, Carlin makes weekend tours, four-day weekends that take him to halls around the country.

"I do a little Vegas, one show at midnight. Years ago I said I'd never go back, but they've grown up. No restrictions on language."

Carlin, a native New Yorker, now lives in West Los Angeles and gets his ideas at home.

"I read a certain amount and have the television on, not to concentrate on, but just to have it there as a medium. You get bombarded with images and little bits, sufficient for you to find a lot of stimulating notions. That's the writer's stock in trade, an accumulation of ideas that you can organize for yourself. I'm a note taker, then an organizer."

Lanctot revisits Cannes

By TRISH WORRON

CANNES, France (CP) — Eight years ago, actress Micheline Lanctot was in this Mediterranean resort at the Cannes film festival and says "it was so revolting, I swore I'd never come back."

She still doesn't like the festival, but on Monday Ms. Lanctot hid any hint of distaste at an official reception given in her honor by Cinema Canada.

It isn't only time that has mellowed her feelings about the festival, now in its 33rd year. The Quebec native, who first visited here in 1972 as the star of La Vraie Nature de Bernadette, has changed hats.

She now is a director and her first feature, L'Homme a Toute Faire, is one of 22 movies chosen from among almost 500 screened around the world for inclusion in the Director's Fortnight — a category for novice directors.

"As a director I have $500,000 (the cost of her film) hanging over my head," she said in an interview.

"Cannes is vital for distributors and being in the Fortnight means you get much better coverage."

Pierre-Henri Deleau, the head of the Quinzaine, as the Fortnight is known in French, estimates that 80 per cent of the films shown in the selection are sold to distributors from abroad, who are in Cannes in full force.

Such directors as German Werner Herzog, who showed Aguirre in 1973 and American Martin Scorcese, who followed the year later with Mean Streets, were introduced to the world through the Quinzaine.

Canadian Gilles Carle, who opened the official competition of the festival Friday night with his musical Fantastica, also showed his La Tete de Normande St.-Onge in the 1976 Fortnight.

Ms. Lanctot's film, known in English as The Handyman, opened in March to good reviews in Montreal, a pattern which is being repeated through word-of-mouth in Cannes.

The production, which she admits was made on a "puny budget," is an all-Quebec affair, including actress Andree Pelletier and newcomer Jocelyn Berube in the title role. Gilles Vigneault wrote the title song and Francois Lanctot, the director's younger brother, the musical score.

The movie, the only Canadian production selected by an international jury for the category, is a portrait of Armand Dorion, a handyman from the Gaspe.

Zsa Zsa offers $1 million

scott's world
by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Zsa Zsa Gabor offers a flat $1 million reward to anyone who can prove she's ever had a facelift.

"I also make the same reward to anybody who can prove I had anything else lifted," she said, her accent as richly Hungarian as ever.

Zsa Zsa, bejewelled and befurred, held herself like a Balkan queen in a chic Beverly Hills restaurant, engrossed in her favorite topic of conversation — herself.

At this stage in her life the blonde actress is getting a bit defensive about her appearance and her age, both of which she swears are on the level.

No one — quite possibly Zsa Zsa herself — can pinpoint the number of years since her birth. She claims she is not yet 50 which would seem to be gilding the lily in view of the fact she was voted "Miss Hungary" of 1936.

"Facelifts leave scars," Zsa Zsa went on. "You can see for yourself that I have no scars at all."

She pulled back her blonde hair to reveal the flawless skin behind her ears and along her hairline. She also thrust her chin upwards to show an unblemished neck. She closed her eyes to prove the lids were unmarked by scalpel or suture.

"See," she said triumphantly. "Not a mark.

"For 20 years people have been saying I've had my face lifted. The women in this town like to say I've had cosmetic surgery It makes me seem older. They don't like the fact that I am younger than most of them.

"I've never needed a facelift. I was born with a wonderful skin. And I've kept enough weight so that it doesn't sag or wrinkle.

"Also I am lucky to have high cheekbones and I don't smoke or drink or have bad thoughts. I swim one hour a day at six o'clock in the morning, I exercise every day and I have a massage three times a week."

While indignantly denying she has undergone cosmetic surgery, Zsa Zsa was quick enough to blow the whistle on her mother, Joli Gabor.

"Mama did have a facelift this year," Zsa Zsa said. "She had an unveiling of her face not long ago and she looks younger than me and my sister, Eva. Mama is doing very nicely in the jewelry business in New York.

"I talk to Mama by telephone every day. She is the wisest woman who ever lived. I take her advice, but not on Teddy Kennedy. She says any handsome rich boy who works that hard deserves to be president.

Zsa Zsa leads a life of luxury in the mansion that Howard Hughes owned at the time of his death. The estate perches atop the highest knoll in Bel Air. She has three full-time servants and a fleet of expensive automobiles.

She recently sold her gold Rolls Royce for $250,000 and bought a new Rolls convertible for a measley $180,000.

Although she hasn't made a movie in years, Zsa Zsa probably earns as much money as any actress in Hollywood through business associations and wise investments.

Still, at heart, Zsa Zsa is an actress and thrilled with the idea of going to Turkey next month to star in a two-hour TV special to be produced by her seventh husband, attorney Mike O'Hara.

From Turkey, Zsa Zsa flies to London for a TV special and then to Australia to star on stage in "Blythe Spirit" for 14 weeks at $25,000 per week.

Klinker, Klunker

EDMONTON (CP) — After eight years as Corporal Max Klinger on the CBS television show *M*A*S*H*, Jamie Farr says the public can't see past the Klinger.

Farr was originally hired for just one day to play the phoney transvestite.

But that was in 1972, and Klinger is still trying to get out of the army.

Sometimes, he says, people even get the name wrong and refer to him as "Klinker" or "Klunker."

The bidding:

1 ♡	2 ◇	2 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	4 ♡

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

Some of the most difficult plays in bridge are really quite simple if you take the time to think them out. Consider this deal where West could have stopped South from making four hearts had he played more carefully.

West led the king of diamonds, on which East played the three and South the six. Judging correctly from South's three no-trump bid that declarer still had the A-J of diamonds and that a diamond continuation would prove fatal, West shifted to the queen of clubs at trick two.

South won with the ace, drew three rounds of trumps, cashed the king of clubs, and then led a spade from dummy. East played the jack, South the king and West the ace, but it did not really matter which suit West played next.

A club return would hand declarer a ruff and discard, a diamond return would go right into South's A-J, and a spade return to East's jack would establish South's 10-9 as tricks and allow him to discard a diamond from dummy later on. South made the contract as a result of the end-play position he had achieved.

Tempting as it was for West to win declarer's king of spades with the ace, he should have resisted the impulse and played a low spade instead! West should have realized that unless his partner had the queen of spades the contract could not be defeated, and he should have defended on that basis by ducking the king of spades.

Had West stopped to think about it and then played low on the spade king, the contract would have gone down the drain. Whenever declarer got around to leading another spade, East would win with the queen and return a diamond. South eventually would wind up taking second money, losing two spades and two diamonds to go down one.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

Sam pointed to the plan on the table. "I guess that rectangle will be a lawn," he said. "It's big."

"The way we wanted it, and very carefully figured out," John replied. "The sum of the longest side and the diagonal will be just four times the shorter side, and the diagonal is two metres longer than the longer side."

What would be the dimensions?

'Game' turns dead serious

MERCER ISLAND, Wash. (UPI) — At lunch time or after school, Jason, 16, and Dawn, 15, would lead their friends in long talks about suicide and reincarnation. No one knew how serious they were.

No one knew, that is, until early Monday when Jason Perrine and Dawn Swisher stole a 1972 Chevrolet Camaro, roared at top speed across the North Mercer Junior High parking lot and smashed through the concrete wall of the school's gymnasium.

Jason, behind the wheel, was killed instantly. Dawn, who apparently had a change of heart and dived under the dashboard at the last second, was hospitalized in serious condition.

Dr. John Eisele of the King County Medical Examiner's office said a note, signed by Jason and found in the car, was "sufficient evidence" the cause of his death was suicide.

The tragedy stunned the teenagers of the affluent Seattle suburb, particularly the couple's close friends, who said they had "jokingly" discussed detailed suicide plans many times.

"It was a game. It was just a big game," Sheryl Riebman, 15, said, shaking her head and on the verge of tears.

"They took the idea too far, I think," said Michael Mead, 16.

Sheryl, a blond junior high student with braces on her teeth, said she, Jason, Dawn and two other teen-agers began talking about reincarnation months ago after Dawn read the book, Illusions, by Richard Bach.

"We're hoping to get Richard Bach to just talk to Dawn when she comes out of it," she said.

In a fantasy hatched by the group, Sheryl said, Jason and Dawn were supposed to steal a red Italian sports car. They would die in a flaming crash at their old junior high school and move to a "higher plane of existence."

A year later to the day, Sheryl and another teen-ager would kill themselves in the same way, except in a green sports car.

Instead of a red Ferrari or Maserati, Jason and Dawn took a car belonging to Dawn's sister, Diane. They crashed into the school shortly after 5 a.m.

Friends and families said both Jason and Dawn were troubled, alienated kids who despite seeing psychologists were having extreme difficulty adjusting to their first year of high school.

Salvadoran gunmen bomb U.S. embassy

SAN SALVADOR (UPI) — Suspected rightist gunmen threw two bombs and sprayed machine-gun fire at the U.S. embassy, and right-wing military officers ousted the moderate commander of the Salvadoran armed forces.

Authorities said 21 people, including two policemen and four women, were killed during the past 48 hours in political violence across the Central American nation of 4.8 million people.

Witnesses said four gunmen sped past the embassy on a pickup truck Monday night. Two sprayed the building with machine-gun fire while the other two threw two bombs.

Embassy spokesmen said the bombs exploded about 30 seconds apart on the sidewalk outside the iron and concrete mission walls and did no damage.

The embassy attack was followed by right-wing demonstrations Tuesday at the mission and in front of the residence of U.S. Ambassador Robert E. White. White's home was surrounded by demonstrators earlier this week.

The protestors shouted anti-President Carter slogans and demanded the release of 24 civilian and military men accused of plotting a coup against El Salvador's moderate ruling civilian-military junta.

Witnesses said the embassy demonstrators dispersed when former National Guard intelligence Maj. Roberto D'Abuisson, 36, and 23 other civilian and military men arrested last week for plotting the coup were released.

Carter, Reagan fatten their delegate counts

The Associated Press

President Carter won the Maryland and Nebraska presidential primary elections Tuesday night, but Senator Edward Kennedy vowed in defeat to continue his campaign despite the towering odds against him.

Ronald Reagan captured the two Republican primaries and said he was confident, "most optimistic," that he soon will clinch the Republican nomination.

In this latest installment of the long primary parade, Carter and Reagan widened their leads in nominating votes.

George Bush would need a virtual sweep of all the remaining Republican delegates to reach nominating strength.

Carter led for 46 delegates, which would bring his national total to 1,365. He needs 1,666 for renomination. Kennedy was ahead for 36 of Tuesday's delegates, which would put his overall count at 770.

Robert Strauss, Carter's campaign chairman, said the president is likely to have his Democratic delegate majority even before the big primary finale in eight states June 3.

Kennedy, in Albuquerque, N.M., said he had "expected to do better," but added, "there really isn't that much of a difference" in their delegate counts in the Tuesday primaries.

But there is a big difference between their situations, since Carter can clinch the nomination so long as he gets about 26 per cent of the remaining Democratic delegates.

Kampala calmer, factions bargain

KAMPALA (AP) — Commercial life returned to near normal in Kampala today as Ugandans accepted their second military government in a year.

Banks, the post office and the main food market reopened under military guard. Streets were crowded.

Aides said Godfrey Binaisa, ousted as president by a military commission that supports exiled former president Milton Obote, remained in his official residence in Entebbe, 40 kilometres from Kampala. A military spokesman denied reports that he would be tried on corruption charges.

It appeared that Binaisa was being kept in State House by a guard of soldiers from neighboring Tanzania, which invaded Uganda to overthrow dictator Idi Amin 13 months ago and still keeps 10,000 soldiers as the strongest armed force in the country.

The chairman of Uganda's military commission, Paulo Muwanga, told reporters by telephone that negotiations have begun with other Ugandan factions to obtain their support. The factions included the Front For National Salvation — the largest Ugandan exile force that fought against Amin — and the Save Uganda Movement, the second-largest Ugandan exile force.

Muwanga and two army commanders took control of Kampala on Sunday. On Tuesday they announced that a commission including officers from all battalions will name a military government soon to replace Binaisa's civilian cabinet and prepare for the elections already scheduled for December.

Muwanga was the titular leader of the coup as chairman of the legislature's military commission, an advisory body with no military powers. The soldiers to make the coup work were supplied by two other members of the commission, the army chief of staff, Brig. David Oyite Ojok, whom Binaisa tried to fire last Saturday, and the army commander in chief, Maj.-Gen. Tito Okello.

All three are supporters of Obote, who has been an exile in Tanzania since Amin ousted him in 1971.

Muwanga in a broadcast statement accused Binaisa, who took office last June, of incompetence, intrigue and corruption.

Ship-sinking talks cut

NASSAU (Reuter) — Cuba has broken off talks on its sinking of a Bahamas defence force vessel and the resulting deaths of four men aboard, saying that the incident was a plot by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

Eight Cuban fishermen are to appear in Nassau court today to be charged with illegally fishing in Bahamian waters in connection with the incident.

Bahamas External Affairs Minister Paul Adderley rejected the Cuban charge, saying U.S.-Cuban problems had nothing to do with Cuba's strafing and sinking Saturday of the patrol boat, the Flamingo?

Record art sale pays for Ford divorce

NEW YORK (UPI) — Henry Ford II, reportedly trying to sell off some of his art to pay for a costly divorce settlement, auctioned off 10 modern paintings for more than $18 million, setting a record for an American sale.

Tuesday night's auction at Christie's auction gallery fetched $18.39 million for the modern paintings, which also broke the world record for a sale of French Impressionist and modern pictures.

The highest single price was $5.2 million for van Gogh's "Garden of the Poet in Arles," a record price for any modern painter and the second-highest price ever paid for a painting at auction. Only Velazquez's "Juan de Pareja," which cost $5.5 million and hangs at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, brought more at auction in 1970.

The previous record for a van Gogh — $1.8 million — was set Monday night at the sale of another collection in New York.

Monday's sale also set a $1.8 million record for a Gauguin, but that was smashed at the Ford sale with a $2.9 million successful bid on Gauguin's "The Beach at Pouldu," a Brittany landscape.

The buyers at the Ford sale were not identified.

A record of $3.9 million for Cezanne was set with the purchase of "Peasant in Blue Blouse." The previous record was $1.4 million set in 1973.

Another record price was $900,000 for an oil study of a nude by Degas, topping a $780,000 price set in 1973. A portrait of a seated nude by Modigliani brought $600,000, a record for the artist, whose previous auction high was $378,000 in 1975.

Holey mess of insulating

The workmen moved into the bedroom, carefully measured the bedroom wall and plugged in their drill.

Oops. The bit went right through the wall and Kelly now has a gaping hole into her living room.

Better move outside, the workmen thought, and out they went and plugged in their drill.

Into a wooden box holding the central heating pipes this time. Kelly stood there watching foam ooze into her kitchen.

"It was like something from outer space," she said Tuesday. "I just couldn't believe it. It was impossible to be angry because it was all so funny."

"We have replaced the deep freeze and we will be redecorating the living room," said a spokesman for the insulation firm.

NATO calls for release of captives

Times News Services

BRUSSELS — The North American Treaty Association today called for the immediate release of the American hostages in Iran, saying they are being held in "flagrant violation of international law."

The United States and its NATO allies also denounced the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and demanded immediate withdrawal of Russian troops.

In a communique issued at the end of an extraordinary joint session of NATO defence and foreign ministers, including new U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, said the Soviet use of force has jeopardized world peace.

The ministers "expressed their concern that for the first time in the post-war era the Soviet Union had used military force to impose its will on a non-aligned country of the Third World and in a way which affected the over-all strategic situation."

In his diplomatic debut, Muskie told NATO the U.S. commitment to the alliance is stronger than ever but that NATO will have to "share the burden" when America shifts military forces to defend the Persian Gulf.

Muskie's call for solidarity came at a closed meeting of the NATO defence planning committee. Some of the Europeans have threatened to ease the sanctions rather than lose lucrative contracts.

In his speech, Muskie pressed for a relentless economic and diplomatic campaign against Iran and for "the fullest possible implementation" of the sanctions approved by the European Economic Community (EEC) last month but now under review.

The nine EEC members, eight of them also members of NATO, agreed last month to cut off all exports to Iran except food and medicine unless there was "decisive progress" by May 17 toward the release of the 53 U.S. hostages in Iran.

Lately some of the European governments have been considering exempting existing lucrative contracts.

This week, however, the U.K. House of Commons approved a bill giving the government powers to join the EEC sanctions effort after May 17.

The bill will be debated by the House of Lords Thursday and is expected to be signed into law by Queen Elizabeth Friday.

European Community foreign ministers meeting last month set the May 17 sanctions deadline.

Meanwhile, the Ayatollah Beheshti, unofficial leader of Iran's anti-American Islamic Republican Party, said today his party and its allies account for a clear majority of more than 130 seats following last week's second-round elections.

The interior ministry has deferred voting in more than 20 ridings in the 270-seat parliament for election irregularities or the Kurdish war.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini has given Iran's parliament the task of deciding the fate of the U.S. captives.

Soviet airfield to control oil Gulf?

CLEVELAND (UPI) — The Soviet Union is building a major airfield in southwest Afghanistan from which it may be able to control the oil-rich Persian Gulf region, Vice President Walter Mondale said Tuesday.

Mondale made the comment, apparently not previously made public, during a day-long campaign swing through Ohio.

In Washington, some U.S. analysts expressed surprise at Mondale's statement. They said experts are not sure yet whether the Soviets are building an airfield or some other kind of installation.

Appearing before students at suburban Shaker Heights High School, Mondale said: "We now have information that the Soviet Union is building a major new airfield in southwest Afghanistan, where they can base their new aircraft to control the Persian Gulf."

Maybe it was the setting, at a Catholic Charities fund-raising dinner in Lansing, Mich., which touched entertainer Danny Thomas' soul and made him confess: "God, I hate that coffee." He was referring to the no-caffeine coffee he used to pitch on television for a major maker. "It's the only time I was ever untrue to you," he told a startled audience, with a bishop, a monsignor and four priests beside him on the dais. The only coffee he really drinks is "loaded with caffeine," he said, "and I sleep like a dead man."

Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer re-entered hospital for intestinal surgery postponed by the funeral of President Josip Broz Tito of Yugoslavia. Schreyer was admitted to hospital last week but left to lead a delegation to the funeral. He re-entered Ottawa's National Defence Medical Centre Tuesday and is scheduled for surgery Thursday. The operation is a follow-up to one he had for an inflamed intestine in February.

Stratford, Iowa farmer John Bergquist says he's eaten so much lettuce his ears are growing and Kaylen Leeds can be heard mumbling to herself: "I'm not hungry. I'm not hungry." Bergquist, Leeds and more than 300 of their neighbors in this central Iowa town of 870 have enlisted in a 4½-month diet called "The Great Stratford Fat-Off." Begun as a publicity stunt for the community's centennial celebration, it's turned into serious business. Pride is all that's at stake, as the men and women compete to see which sex loses the most. And all over town, people are tightening their belts and pinning on buttons that plead, "Don't Feed Me." The "Fat-Off" waddled off the ground March 1 when the groups of men and women climbed on the truck scales at the Stratford grain elevator. It will end with a weigh-in during the town's July 12 centennial celebration, when both the before and after figures will be announced.

New York mayor Ed Koch got a pre-breakfast visitor — one who scaled a fence at Gracie Mansion, broke a window and stuffed a copy of his master's thesis on management into the mayoral residence. Police arrested 28-year-old Alan Siegel, described by Koch as "a wildman, quite disheveled looking ... with dirty long hair." Koch declined Siegel's invitation for an interview. Says he, "That's a wonderful way to deliver mail."

Dear Abby:

A year ago, after being married 30 years, I came home and found a note on the kitchen table say, "So long!" My husband and I had been bickering for several years, but I never thought he'd leave me. (He is 65 and I am 60.)

I worked our entire married life, as we have no children. He refuses to sit down and talk to me or anyone else. All he says is there is nothing to talk about. We both belong to two groups that meet once a month for dinner. When he sees me at these affairs, he sits with me and even pays for my dinner. When I run into him in restaurants, he'll join me and pick up the check, but as soon as I ask him what the future is for us, he turns off and clams up.

I am going crazy wondering what his intentions are. What do you suggest? Should I just sit tight until he makes a move?

Waiting

Dear Waiting:

Since he left a note saying "So long," and hasn't lived with you since, you can assume that he has deserted you. A lawyer can tell you where you stand legally. Socially, you're a woman without a husband.

Dear Abby:

I recently came across a book that described masturbation as a "valuable tension safety valve."

As a woman of 77, brought up to believe that "self-abuse," as it was called in my day, would lead to idiocy, I was startled and confused.

During all my 44 years of married life (and five children) I never once experienced an orgasm. Now, as an old widow, I self-induced one, and found it wonderful! Am I on the path to perdition? Is single ecstasy wicked?

Being of a logical turn of mind, I cannot see how an occasional self-indulgence is harmful. Certainly no one else is involved or harmed. How can such a glorious, exciting and relaxing experience be wrong, harmful or dirty?

Anonymous, Please

Dear Anonymous:

Masturbation is normal, natural and universal. The only harmful aspect is the guilt it produces in those who have been programmed to believe it is wrong, harmful and dirty.

Dear Abby:

Would it be unethical for my husband and me to stipulate in our wills that the gold in our teeth be removed upon our demise and returned to our estate?

Dear Practical:

It would be ethical, but whether it would be practical is another matter. My dentist informs me that the gold in one's teeth usually isn't worth extracting.

If you plan this, make sure it is clearly outlined in your will and that the family knows to have this done by the mortician.

Big dish, little time

Skillet Chicken Cordon Bleu . . . a classic dinner made easy and quick

There's nothing quite like the delectable combination of flavors in Chicken Cordon Bleu, that classic French dish. But since it takes a lot of time and patience to prepare it correctly, most of us prefer to find it listed on a restaurant menu.

If it's one of your favorites, here's an alternative that you can fix at home. It has all of the flavor and a lot less work.

Skillet Chicken Cordon Bleu can be prepared on top of the range or in a microwave oven. Simply simmer lightly browned chicken in a delicate sauce made from an envelope of gravy mix for chicken. Top with slivers of ham and shredded Swiss cheese. Then pop under the broiler just long enough for the cheese to melt and serve while piping hot.

Cranberry sauce is an ideal accompaniment to poultry and this version for Tangy Cranberry Sauce is especially good. It's so easy to add a subtle flavor accent by stirring in a dash of worcestershire sauce and dehydrated orange peel for a tasty change.

Serve this meal with buttered peas or green beans, rice or noodles and hot muffins. Strawberry shortcake or peach sundaes and coffee or milk would complete a meal that is easy enough for family meals and special enough for company.

SKILLET CHICKEN CORDON BLEU

4 to 6 chicken breast halves
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
Salt and Pepper
¾ cup water
¼ cup dry white wine
1 envelope (1¼ oz.) Gravy Mix for Chicken
¼ cup slivered cooked ham
¼ cup shredded Swiss cheese

Brown chicken in butter in large skillet; pour off excess fat. Season with salt and pepper. Combine water, wine, contents of gravy mix envelope, and ham; pour over chicken in skillet. Cover; simmer 20 to 30 minutes, until tender. Remove chicken to broiler pan; sprinkle with cheese. Broil a few minutes, just to melt cheese. Serve chicken with sauce spooned over it. 4 to 6 servings.

Microwave Directions: Melt butter in shallow baking dish. Arrange chicken, skin-side up, in dish, turning to coat both sides with butter. Combine water, wine, and gravy mix; pour over chicken. Cover with wax paper. Microwave cook on HIGH 5 minutes. Stir sauce and rearrange chicken in pan. Cook, covered, 5 minutes longer. Sprinkle with ham and cheese. Cook, covered, 2 to 3 minutes longer, or until chicken is tender and well cooked.

ZESTY CRANBERRY SAUCE

1 can (14 oz.) whole berry cranberry sauce
1 teaspoon Worcestershire Sauce
1 teaspoon French's Orange Peel

Combine ingredients in bowl, stirring to break up cranberry sauce. Chill before serving. Makes 2 cups.

Cooking evolves with 'borrowing'

the 60-minute gourmet

Like most French chefs of my generation, I "teethed," so to speak, on the teachings of Auguste Escoffier. His books were gospel, and it was a brave chef, indeed, who would stray from "Le Guide Culinaire."

The writings and "school" of Escoffier are still at the foundation of all classic French cookery, and yet his rules are broken. Chefs have learned to adapt and adopt from other cultures. Most of the precepts that I use in the kitchen date back to my early apprenticeship and yet I find pleasure in "borrowing" thoughts from other cultures.

Over a period of time I have spent many hours watching Virginia Lee, the chef and author, chop fresh ginger, add a dash of soy sauce — light or dark — to one preparation or another, sprinkle fresh coriander, sometimes called Chinese parsley, over a dish she was stir-frying in her wok, and so on.

And as a consequence I have gained a hitherto unknown appreciation of ingredients that are "foreign" to the French. One recent dish that I prepared has quite definite overtones borrowed from Virginia. It is a dish of fillets of sole stuffed with chopped shrimp seasoned not only with such Western staples as celery and mushrooms but with chopped fresh ginger and chopped fresh coriander. The sole is baked and at the very end basted with a blend of heavy cream (cream is almost never used in traditional Eastern cookery), soy sauce and chopped scallions.

This is a very easy dish to prepare and the cooking time is relatively brief. It bakes in 20 minutes. An ideal accompaniment for the dish is obvious, a simple dish of rice, which cooks in approximately the same length of time as the sole.

To go about the preparation of this meal, it is best to begin assembling and chopping and otherwise making ready the sole with shrimp stuffing. Once it is in the oven, proceed to the preparation of the rice. A simple tossed salad of Boston lettuce, oil and vinegar would make an excellent accompaniment.

LIMANDES FARCIES ORIENTALE
(Sole stuffed with shrimp and ginger)

8 small skinless, boneless fillets of sole, about 1½ pounds.
¼ pound fresh shrimp, shelled and deveined.
3 tablespoons butter.
¾ cup finely chopped mushrooms.
½ cup finely diced celery.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh ginger.
½ cup fine fresh bread crumbs.
1 tablespoon finely chopped fresh coriander leaves.
¼ cup heavy cream.
1 tablespoon soy sauce.
½ cup chopped scallions.

1. Preheat the oven to 425 degrees.

2. There is a small fine bone line about half way up the center of each fillet. Cut around it and discard it.

3. Put the shrimp on a flat surface and chop finely. There should be about one-half cup. Set aside.

4. Melt one tablespoon of the butter in a saucepan and add the onion. Cook until wilted and add the mushrooms and celery. Cook briefly, stirring often, about one minute. Add salt and pepper to taste. Stir in the ginger and remove from the heat. Scrape the mixture into a mixing bowl.

5. Add the shrimp and bread crumbs, salt, pepper and coriander to the mixture and blend well.

6. Use one tablespoon of butter to rub the bottom of a shallow baking dish large enough to hold four of the fish fillets in one layer. Sprinkle the baking dish with salt and pepper.

7. Arrange four of the fillets, skinned side down, on the baking dish in one layer. Spoon equal amounts of the filling on top of each fillet in the center.

8. Cover each serving with another fillet, skinned side down.

9. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Brush the top of the fillets with the remaining tablespoon of butter.

10. Put the dish on the stove and heat until the butter on the baking dish starts to bubble. Put the dish in the oven and bake 10 minutes.

11. Combine the cream, soy sauce and scallion. Spoon equal portions of this over the stuffed fish. Return to the oven and bake 10 minutes, basting occasionally.

Yield: 4 servings.

RIZ AU CARROTTES
(Rice with carrots)

1 small carrot.
1 tablespoon butter.
1 tablespoon finely chopped onion.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
1 cup long-grain rice.
1½ cups water.

1. Trim and scrape the carrot. Cut the carrot into one-and-one-half-inch lengths.

2. Cut each length into very thin slices. Stack the slices and cut them into very fine julienne strips. There should be about half a cup.

3. Heat the butter in a small, heavy saucepan with a tight-fitting lid. Add the onion and carrot. Add salt and pepper to taste. Cook briefly until onion is wilted.

4. Add the rice and water. Bring to the boil and cover closely. Cook 17 minutes.

Yield: 4 servings.

Dose of hormone curbs calcium loss

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Osteoporosis, or the loss of calcium in bone, is frequently associated with women in their post-menopause period. For years there has been a constant, running discussion about the advantages and disadvantages of using hormone replacement therapy. Today, each individual case is carefully evaluated. There is no universal law that applies to all women.

Recently, Dr. Gilbert Gordan, professor of medicine at the University of California in San Francisco, has completed an important scientific study of this problem. He found that low doses of estrogen hormone can prevent the bone loss and can even be helpful in restoring bone loss.

Dr. Gordan has been using an estrogen compound, "mestranol," for this purpose. His study will undoubtedly be duplicated in many hospitals and universities all over the country. The advantages may be great if these findings are substantiated.

Men deserve equal time in terms of "menopause." For a long time it was felt that advancing age alone was responsible for the so-called male menopause. Recently, it was found that other factors besides age may be responsible.

Dr. Mitchell Harman, of the National Institute of Aging's Gerontology Research Centre, believes that "obesity, chronic illness, alcoholism or drugs may lower the blood levels of testosterone (male sex hormone), causing menopause." All these factors — plus the emotional status of a man — must be considered as a cause of male menopause. Only then can active treatment be planned.

There is now virtually no area of the heart, inside or outside, that cannot be reached or studied in the finest detail. The electrocardiogram, the echocardiogram, the arteriogram, and special types of cardiac catheterizations indicate the function of the heart in health and disease.

Added to this, there is now a new ultrasonic probe which is small enough to fit into a catheter. Using sound waves, Dr. Ephraim Glassman and Dr. Itzhak Kronzon, of the New York University Medical Center, are able to study the structure and the motion of the heart valves and the size of the four chambers of the heart.

By this method, even special arteries that lead from the heart to the lungs can be investigated. The presence of fluid around the heart, an especially dangerous illness, can be recognized and better treated.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, May 15, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis on relatives, a "quiz," short-range plans, trips, humor, meeting someone who brings cheer into your life. Gemini, Sagittarius and the number 3 figure prominently. Give full rein to intellectual curiosity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some apparent delays work in your favor, especially where financial transactions are concerned. Money picture is brighter than might be anticipated. Aquarius, Gemini, Scorpio persons play key roles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You make significant contacts, cycle high — you are at right place at crucial moment. Be ready for change, travel, variety — and excitement of discovery. Perceive potential, express and write — take initiative, imprint style.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Diplomacy and moderation should be your guidelines. You are due to "correct" situation at home. You gain access to confidential information. An agent or intermediary is working quietly for you — behind the scenes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Aura of glamour, mystery and romance pervades intriguing scenario. Obtain valid hint from Cancer message. Information you seek is available, but camouflaged. Define terms, streamline procedures, perfect techniques. A Piscean "takes you by the hand."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Emphasis on career, prestige, honor, ability to make room for yourself in rarefied atmosphere. Capricorn, Gemini, Cancer natives figure prominently. You'll be given more responsibility — you also have greater chance for reward and overall success.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish rather than initiate project — strike chord of wider or universal appeal. One you respect, who aided you in past, may now seek your assistance. Adhere to principles of Golden Rule. Aries and another Libra figure prominently — and so does the number 9.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could have "occult" experience. One close to you, including partner or mate, discusses new approach to finances, investments, protection of assets. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. You can successfully dramatize beliefs, principles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow through on "inner feelings." Learn by teaching — consolidate recent acquisitions. Spotlight on public relations, willingness to make intelligent concessions, cooperative efforts, contracts and marital status.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Avoid definite commitments, steer clear of direct confrontations. Spotlight on employment, nutrition, dependents and pets. Make inquiries, plan ahead for social affair. Gemini, Sagittarius natives play positive roles.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Imprint style, welcome chance to prove special abilities. Relationship intensifies — member of opposite sex does care and will prove it. Another Aquarian, a Leo and Taurus figure in scenario. You will be asked to revise and review.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spotlight on bargains, security, realizing true worth of property, other possessions. You learn what can be retained, what should be discarded. Gain indicated through written word. Be analytical, seek reasons, discover motives.

IF MAY 15 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have a great degree of personal magnetism, members of opposite sex find you attractive. You can be self-indulgent, stubborn — you are sensual, appreciate luxury, the arts and jewelry. You have unusual voice, a "sweet tooth" and have knack of bringing together those who hold opposing views. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons play important roles in your life. June could be your most significant month of 1980. Contacts made last year should now bear fruit. If single, marriage potential is highlighted. Married or single, you have additional responsibilities and could start your own business.

New air feat

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — A travel agency executive Tuesday claimed a record for round-the-world commercial jetliner travel after circling the globe in 50 hours, 51 minutes.

Warren Rairden, 56, arrived at San Francisco International Airport on a Pan American flight from Japan to complete his jaunt — bettering by two hours, 43 minutes the old record.

Keep those cookies coming

Cookies can be nutritious — and easy to carry along to a picnic

We read a lot these days about more nutritious foods. A lot of people ask then, how can I make foods healthier and can nutritious foods be tasty as well as easy to prepare? Yes, nutritious foods are easy to prepare — what better way to start than with cookies? Cookies are simple to make and can be good for you as well.

With all the warm weather we have been having, there will certainly be more picnics. The following two cookie recipes, Applesauce bars and Raisin-Oatmeal Cookies, are both nutritious and good travellers.

New recipes are not really needed to make nutritious cookies as the old ones can be adapted. Whole wheat flour can be substituted for all-purpose white flour. Also such things as raisins, nuts, sunflower seeds, coconut, dried fruits, wheat germ, skim milk powder or rolled oats can be added to provide more fiber, minerals and vitamins. Don't be afraid to use your imagination in creating cookies that are nutritious as well as interesting and tasty.

The five different types of cookies include:

Drop Cookies: The fat and sugar are creamed together; then the liquid ingredients are added. The combined dry ingredients are mixed in. After this any dried fruits, nuts or coconut can be added. If wheat germ or bran is used, they are added with the dry ingredients. Then the cookies are dropped on a cookie sheet by teaspoonfuls.

Refrigerator Cookies: The dough is made in the same way that drop cookies are, yet is much stiffer. The prepared dough is shaped into rolls, wrapped, and is chilled until needed. To bake the cookies, the dough is sliced thinly. Sunflower seeds, nuts or other ingreients can be added as a last step before shaping into rolls.

Rolled Cookies: Are also made in the same manner as drop cookies but the dough is stiffer. Here the dough is only chilled briefly in order to make it easier to roll. Next the dough is rolled and cut into shapes with a cookie cutter. As the dough is rolled; nuts, fruit and seeds make rolling the dough difficult. These items should be avoided in rolled cookies. However, ground nuts can easily be added. Coconut may be sprinkled on top of the cookies before baking.

Bar or Slice Cookies: May or may not have a shortbread type of base. All bar cookies are baked in a cake pan. When they are cool they are cut in bars or slices. With this type of cookie, extra nutritional ingredients are easy to add.

Unbaked Cookies: These cookies are just that — unbaked. As these cookies are not baked, the ingredients should taste good raw. These are such things as chopped, dried apricots; raisins; coconut; dates; nuts and sunflower seeds.

RAISIN-OATMEAL COOKIES

- 1 cup raisins
- ½ cup water
- ½ cup shortening
- ¾ cup sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- ½ cup all-purpose flour
- ½ tsp. baking soda
- ½ tsp. baking powder
- ½ tsp. salt
- ¾ tsp. cinnamon
- ¼ tsp. nutmeg
- ¼ tsp. cloves
- ½ cup wheat germ
- ½ cup whole wheat flour
- ½ cup rolled oats
- ½ cup chopped nuts

Boil raisins and water 5 min. (Save water) Cream shortening and sugar well. Beat in eggs, one at a time; add vanilla. Beat thoroughly. Sift together flour, baking soda, baking powder, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves. Stir in wheat germ and whole wheat flour. Add dry ingredients alternately with raisin liquid to creamed mixture. Fold in raisins, rolled oats and nuts. Drop onto greased cookie sheet. Bake at 200° C. (400° F.) for 10-12 min. (Makes 3 dozen).

APPLESAUCE BARS

- ¼ cup shortening
- ⅔ cup brown sugar
- 1 egg
- 1 cup aplesauce
- ½ cup all-purpose flour
- ¼ tsp. nutmeg
- 1 tsp. baking soda
- 1 tsp. cinnamon
- ½ tsp. salt
- ½ cup whole wheat flour
- ½ cup chopped nuts

Cream shortening and sugar in a large bowl until fluffy. Beat in egg and blend in applesauce. Sift together all-purpose flour, nutmeg, baking soda, cinnamon and salt. Stir in whole wheat flour. Add to applesauce mixture, stirring until well mixed. Fold in nuts. Pour into a greased 2.5 L (9 in.) square baking pan. Bake at 180° C. (350° F.) for 30 min. Cool in pan and cut into bars. (Makes 30 3x6 cm (1¼x2¼ in.) bars).

Home grown salads on way

By HILDA BEASTALL

Fresh local vegetables will be a real spring tonic for everyone this month, whether buying because of lack of balcony growing space for enough kinds, or whether you have managed to grow tasty morsels in contrived garden cold-frames during the past two months.

Because they are indeed freshly picked, pulled or gathered, these new vegetables need special care from the moment you get them. While taking them home from a store, put in shaded part of car, or if carrying, try to get them on your shady side.

These are not mature vegetable such as we buy in winter, which survive much travelling and exposure to air and light.

Arrived at home, wrap lettuce or other green vegetables rather loosely in a damp towel (not wet) before putting into a plastic bag with a tie. Then keep in a vegetable bin of refrigerator or on fridge shelf until needing to take some out to wash and prepare fo. a meal. You will find that the damp cotton dishtowel refreshes even wilted greens in time, without the harmful soaking in water so prevalent until a few years ago.

When lettuce or other greens are again crisp, they can be stored a day or two in a sealed and airless plastic bag. They should be dry for this storing or molds will develop.

This same general system works when you bring in salad greens, young radishes, a few pods of peas from the garden. In this case only enough for one meal should be gathered.

Wash very briefly to remove soil; wrap in clean dry cloth since it becomes damp enough with the little moisture left on vegetables. Put into plastic bag and on refrigerator shelf until final preparation for eating. Everything will be beautifully fresh and crisp, even in half an hour.

Whenever possible, let it be only minutes between gathering and eating. Only then does the delicate flavor of freshness come through. Not only flavor but vitamin content decreases with passing time, which makes me certain that vitamins and flavors are closely linked.

Strawberries and other later berries, have best flavor, color and nutrition values when gathered fully ripened and eaten sun-warmed. Cooked for even a few minutes, it is noticeable that sugar is needed to make berries palatable to replace natural sugars lost in steam and by the heating.

Lemon juice added to fresh fruit when cooking replaces the lost vitamin C and also cuts need for so much extra sugar. The juice neutralizes some of the acidity of the berries. Also quarter teaspoon (half millilitre) of fresh angelica leaf to 4 cups berries will further cut the quantity of sugar needed. Angelica is not a sweetener, it is a neutralizer of acidity. It must be measured to avoid using too much; lemon juice can be used freely.

Lettuce keeps crisper when cool and damp — but not too wet

Rhubarb when first coming into spring use is never sweet. A half lemon, skin and juice was always boiled with the chunks to save using quantities of sugar which was not easily available during rationing periods. Also it was found that using a minimum of water, as little as a tablespoon to about 4 cups of rhubarb, helps to retain flavor of cooked fruits including that of berries. A good tip is to use some crushed sweet berries, raw, with cooked rhubarb when serving.

Parsley is today used not only as garnish but as an ingredient for flavor, minerals and vitamins in which it is abundant, and also for its appetizing bright green color. If more is brought in than is required, it keeps fresh for two days in a small clean glass jar. Place on shelf in fridge where you'll see it to remind you to use while good.

New potatoes are looked forward to after the gradual decline in flavor of those from winter storage. This is one of the few vegetables that is not particularly nutritious when small and young, but they do have a fine distinctive flavor. Don't buy more than can be used within say, three days, and do keep them cold to prevent them drying out.

When lifting them from the garden, lift only enough for one meal, and be sure to use other vegetables such as peas and carrots to go with them. A meal of new immature potatoes alone can end in disaster. I saw one case of this personally.

If you have made a habit of cooking new potatoes with mint, try them a few times without. You may prefer them that way.

Don't waste the smallest potatoes. Wash well with hands those no less than 2 cm diameter (they are still too small to scrub), and steam briefly until tender. Peel or not, as desired; use them cold, rolled in a little softened margarine or homemade yogurt and then with slices of hardboiled eggs with a bright red whole canned tomato on the side.

It will be about the third week in July before we can look for own outdoor ripened tomatoes, so until the earlier local greenhouse ripe ones get around, those that were canned last year at full ripeness are a satisfactory and nutritious substitute.

Young carrots are also a great delicacy. Eat them raw as often as possible. Wash well with hands, there are no skins to rub off. Dried, and put into a jar with lid, they too will keep fresh for a few hours.

Green peas, picked minutes before mealtime are worth the extra effort in planning the timing. Shell them quickly. For a quantity, try to get help for this. When you grow the sweetpod peas, there is no preparation, the whole flat pod with tiny immature peas inside is edible, raw, steamed or pan-cooked in mixed dishes of vegetables.

If the regular shelled peas are really small and homegrown, cook them in 15 mL boiling water and 15 mL soft margarine, with lid on, for three to four minutes.

Use gentle heat, just at boiling point, and test for doneness at three minutes. Another way is to lay chopped wet lettuce leaves below and over green peas and steam gently for three minutes, covered. Then add a little margarine before serving.

Peas that have been picked for some time can be improved by adding a few grains of salt and of sugar to the minimum of boiling water to half cover the peas in the pan. Cook for maximum of 5 minutes. Drain off liquid, keeping it for other use. Drop in 5 mL piece of margarine; toss to melt. Put lid on and place back on hot burner to reheat while readying other items of the meal.

Don't forget that all the young spring vegetables give us most pleasure if we can eat them raw. The only one I've never tried this way is the potato.

Whatever vegetables you grow, or buy, that is fresh spring produce, treat carefully in storage and in cooking preparation, when needed.

Raw or cooked, you will enjoy them more for their fine flavors which may indeed be new to you.

Domestic caviar boom a side effect of crisis

craig claiborne

One of the most curious and unexpected spin-offs of the current crisis between the United States, Iran and the Soviet Union may be the impetus it is giving the burgeoning caviar industry in this country — and the acceptance of the fact that the North American-made product is not all that inferior to its imported counterparts.

For example, the Palm Court of the Plaza Hotel here has started an American caviar bar that is open Wednesday through Saturday from 4 to 7 p.m. The caviar is served with toast, chopped onion, chopped egg, lemon and sour cream, and the cost is $16 for a one-ounce portion.

Trans World Airlines has recently announced that on its trans-Atlantic flights it is serving caviar from the roe of sturgeon caught in United States waters.

"We stopped serving Iranian caviar when the events in Iran dictated it," Michael T. Duarte, TWA's director of dining service programs, said, "and were considering switching to Russian caviar when the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan changed our minds."

The Palace Restaurant here, often referred to as the most expensive restaurant in America, with menus for one person priced at $150 and $95, recently introduced a $50-per-person menu for one with American caviar as a specialty of the meal.

And American caviar has been added to the menu at the fashionable Le Cirque Restaurant here. A two-ounce serving is priced at $20.

Price comparisons are interesting. The cost of imported caviar at the retail level ranges from about $170 to $350 or $400 for a 14-ounce tin generally referred to as a "pound." One of the best brands of American caviar, which this season has relatively small "Sevruga-size" grains, is currently selling for about $95 for 14 ounces.

Domestic caviar is not classified according to the traditional Russian names, Sevruga, Osetra and Beluga.

We wrote some time ago of the limited production of California caviar (most of it made from sturgeon from Oregon waters). Subsequently we had a long interview with Mario Garbarino, who may be the largest and certainly is the most enthusiastic producer of native caviar in this country.

Garbarino states that he got into the caviar-producing business thanks to his American-born wife, who is half Cherokee Indian.

"We were vacationing in her home state, Oklahoma," he said, "when she told me that there are lots of sturgeon in American rivers, including the Arkansas, which run close by her home. I checked the Bureau of Fisheries and found it is absolutely true."

Garbarino, who is 36 years old and a native of Genoa, has been in the import business for 10 years. His company's name is Aquamar Gourmet Imports Inc., and his food specialties include, in addition to caviar, dried European mushrooms, smoked salmon, black and white truffles, foie gras and other luxury items.

He discovered that sturgeon abounds in domestic waters, including Illinois, South Carolina and Oregon. Legend has it that years ago sturgeon roe from the waters of Sturgeon Bay, Wis., were shipped to Russia to be processed. The caviar was reshipped to America labeled Russian caviar.

When Garbarino arrived at my home recently, he had under his arm about four pounds of salted sturgeon eggs from American waters that he would prepare for putting into tins bearing his own label.

The ideal way to prepare caviar, he said, would be to have it processed directly at the point where the sturgeon are hauled in, that is to say that the eggs should be sieved, sorted and salted down on the spot.

In that this is currently impossible through lack of organization, he has his fishermen add considerably more salt to the eggs when they are removed from the body of the fish. The eggs are then flown to New York for processing.

The eggs are wrapped in membrane when they are removed from the fish's belly. They are put through a wire sieve with large mesh to loosen them from their membraneous confinement. When they arrive in his custody, he puts them through a cleansing and desalting process.

When he became interested in producing caviar, he discovered that fishermen have been catching sturgeon in American waters for decades. They may eat the fish — some people think it is catfish — and throw the eggs away or feed them to the cat.

To aid him in a search for the roe, he found a man who had taught fish culture at the University of Georgia.

"He knew lots of fishermen who could supply me with eggs," Garbarino said. "And the fishermen were pleased to discover they could make money out of something they used to throw away." He then persuaded a friend from Italy, who had been involved in the production of Iranian caviar, to come to America to give him instruction in caviar processing.

At one point Pierre Franey and I made taste comparisons of fresh American caviar alongside the imported version, both pasteurized and domestic. The eggs of the pasteurized product were invariably firmer in texture and saltier to the taste. In blindfold tests the two fresh products, one domestic, the other imported, seemed remarkably alike. When testing with full knowledge of which was which, we gave a slight edge to the imported product. The American caviar seemed in some samples to be a bit more moist. And the Russian and Iranian imports had a slight residue of oil at the bottom of each tin of fresh caviar.

Q. I recently read an article that mentioned chicken-fried steaks. Can you tell me where the name came from and can you print a recipe?

A. Come to think of it, I have never seen a recipe for chicken-fried steaks. It is my conjecture that the name came about years ago when it was impossible to get beefsteaks of good quality in the rural South.

Most steaks were cut thin and pounded with the side of a heavy plate to "tenderize" them. They were then coated in a mixture of flour, salt and a generous amount of black pepper. They were fried like chicken, either in lard or solid white shortening.

After frying, the steaks were removed. The fat was poured off and milk was added to the brown particles in the pan. This made a "cream gravy," which was served over the steaks.

I believe Swiss steaks had more or less the same origin. After the steaks were fried they were covered with a sauce of tomatoes, carrots, celery and peas and baked until fork tender.

Q. I recently read an account of a Texas "do" at which fried rattlesnake was served. I have a cousin in Florida whose property is infested with rattlesnakes, which he kills. I understand they are edible and would like to send him a recipe. Can you print one?

A. There is a recipe for fried rattlesnake in "The Wide Wide World of Texas Cooking" by Morton G. Clark (Funk and Wagnalls, 1970). It is called Vibora de Cascabel:

"A snake of 3 to 4 feet has the best quality meat. To prepare: Cut off the snake's head and let the body drain. Skin as though removing a glove. Slit snake up the middle. Discard the entrails. Rinse under cold water and pat dry. Cut body crosswise in one- to two-inch lengths. Dredge in lightly salted cornmeal. Let stand a few minutes for the coating to set. Fry in hot lard, one-third-inch deep, until brown on both sides. When crisp, drain on paper. Serve as soon as possible."

Q. I recently dined on snapper soup. Is this soup made with snapping turtle or another meat?

A. The genuine, authentic snapper soup is, indeed, made with the meat of a snapping turtle (which is one of the few turtles not on the list of endangered species) and laced with Sherry wine. There are, however, some recipes that call for long-simmered veal and chopped hard-cooked eggs to substitute for the real McCoy. I would vouchsafe that most of the so-called "snapper soup" served in America does contain veal with occasionally a few bits of snapping turtle thrown in.

Q. There are two hard-to-find and unrelated ingredients that I am most desirous of obtaining. They are candied angelica for decorating desserts and dende oil for making a few Brazilian dishes. Can you tell me where to obtain them?

A. Candied angelica may be purchased in most fine food shops that specialize in fruitcake ingredients. It may be ordered by mail from Aphrodisia, 28 Carmine Street, New York, N.Y. 10014, and from Lekvar by the Barrel, 1577 First Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10028. Both shops will supply catalogues that are well worth obtaining for many odd and hard-to-obtain imported specialties.

Lekvar by the Barrel also sells the dende oil that you desire.

Readers are invited to send in questions about food and cooking techniques to the Food Editor, The New York Times, 229 West 43d Street, New York, N.Y., 10036. Unfortunately, unpublished questions cannot be answered individually.

Prize pie recipe given

By PHYLLIS HANES
Christian Science Monitor

Italian Zucchini Crescent Pie, a meatless main dish, was the $40,000 grand prize winner at the 29th annual Bake-Off earlier this year at the Fontainbleu Hilton Hotel. It was baked by Mrs. Millicent Caplan of Tamarac, Fla., who might use the prize money for a trip to Paris, France, and a course at the Cordon Bleu Cooking School.

Seasoned with herbs, the recipe serves six and costs less than 70 cents a serving.

From 8 a.m. until 2 p.m. contestants chatted as they cooked, admiring one another's cake or bread or casserole. The huge hotel ballroom was one big shiny kitchen. The aromas were wonderful.

Each cook was allowed to repeat a recipe three times and choose the best of the three to send to the judges.

Here is the top prize-winning recipe.

ITALIAN ZUCCHINI CRESCENT PIE

- 4 cups zucchini, unpeeled and thinly sliced
- 1 cup onion, coarsely chopped
- ½ cup margarine or butter
- ½ cup parsley, chopped or 2 tablespoons Dried parsley
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon black pepper
- ¼ teaspoon garlic powder
- ¼ teaspoon sweet basil leaves
- ¼ teaspoon oregano leaves
- 2 eggs, well beaten
- 2 cups meunster or mozzarella cheese, shredded
- 8-ounce can Pillsbury refrigerated Quick Crescent Dinner Rolls
- 2 teaspoons Dijon mustard

Heat oven to 375 degrees F. In 10-inch skillet, cook zucchini and onion in margarine until tender, about 10 minutes. Stir in parsley and seasonings. In large bowl, blend eggs and cheese. Stir in vegetable mixture.

Separate dough into 8 triangles. Place in ungreased 11-inch quiche pan, 10-inch pie pan or 12-by-8-inch baking dish; press over bottom and up side to form crust. Spread crust with mustard. Pour vegetable mixture evenly into crust.

Bake at 375 degrees F. 18 to 20 minutes or until knife inserted near center comes out clean. If crust becomes too brown, cover with foil during last 10 minutes of baking. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Cut into wedges to serve; serve hot. Serves 6.

Here is Mrs. Beth Porteur's $15,000 prize-winning recipe.

STREUSEL PECAN PIE SQUARES

Crust:
- 3 cups all purpose, unbleached or self-rising flour
- ¾ cup firmly packed brown sugar
- 1½ cups margarine or butter, chilled

Filling:
- ¾ cup firmly packed brown sugar
- 1½ cups corn syrup or Maple-flavored syrup
- 1 cup milk
- ⅓ cup margarine or butter, melted
- ¾ teaspoon vanilla
- 4 eggs
- 1½ cups chopped pecans

Heat oven to 400 degrees F. Lightly spoon flour into measuring cup; level off. In large bowl combine all crust ingredients; blend until crumbly. Reserve 2 cups crumbs for filling and topping. Press remaining crumbs in bottom and three-fourths inch up side of ungreased 15-by-10-inch jelly roll pan. Bake at 400 degrees F. 10 minutes.

In large bowl, combine one-fourth cup reserved crumbs and all filling ingredients except pecans; mix well. Stir in pecans. Pour over prebaked crust; bake additional 10 minutes. Lower oven temperature to 350 degrees F. Sprinkle remaining one and three-fourths cups reserved crumbs over filling; bake at 350 degrees F. 20 to 25 minutes or until filling is set and crumbs are golden brown. If desired, serve with whipped cream or ice cream. Makes 15 servings.

Francese — the veal thing

By MIKE McGRADY

During their bachelorhood most men will learn to cook at least a few meals. This is the only sure way of staving off the number-one threat to all single people; outright starvation. Not to mention the other advantages. There are few sights more memorable than the way a guest's eyes will soften in the light cast by flaming crepes suzettes served by an earnest young man.

It used to be possible for single people to get by with just a half-dozen truly impressive dinners. By the time they ran through their full repertory, one of two things would have happened. The young guest would have seen through them and moved along. Or they would have done what they were always expected to do — taken over the cooking.

But times do change. And now that you're expected to do your share of the cooking, you may want to revive one of those romantic meals from your younger days. When magazines advise their readers on how to perk up a flagging marriage, they inevitably suggest a candlelit dinner for two. Well, now it's your turn.

So tonight you're going to get rid of the kids — send them off to Eddie's Pizza and the latest disco movie. Put the new candles in the old candlestick holders. Get the wine on ice. Get yourself showered and and lotioned and when your partner comes in, weary after another long day at work, you're going to be waiting there with a big kiss and they are going to say, "Hey, are you back on the sauce again?"

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: salt, pepper, flour, sugar, olive oil, milk, rum, garlic, rice and, oh, yes, candlestick holders.

The Shopping List: Scallops of veal (one pound); vin rose; two lemons; broccoli (one pound); three large onions; butter; baking apples; parmesan cheese (four ounces); parsley; candles.

Shopping note: Veal francese — veal wih lemon — may be a meal that can soften a woman's heart; it is also a budget-buster that can flatten a wallet.

The most important part of preparing tonight's meal takes place in the market, not the kitchen. Look for veal that is white instead of pink — the paler the meat, the younger and more tender it is. Ask the butcher to flatten the slices of veal to a thickness of about a quarter of an inch. And when you get the meat home, soak it in a bowl of milk until you're ready to cook it.

4:50 P.M.: First, the baked rice. Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Start a large pot of water boiling, exactly as if you were going to cook spaghetti. When it is boiling briskly, drop in a half cup of rice. After water returns to a boil, cook rice for just five minutes. Then, using a colander, drain away the water.

Place a heavy casserole dish over a medium flame and melt a stick of butter. Finely chop the three onions and stir them into the melted butter. Now add the rice, a dash of salt and half the parmesan cheese.

5:30 P.M.: Cover the casserole dish and put it into the preheated oven. It should complete cooking in just one hour.

5:40 P.M.: Start water boiling in a covered pot. Prepare the broccoli for cooking by cutting away the tough lower portion of the stalks. Cut the remaining stalks into half-inch chunks and boil these for about five minutes before adding the flowerettes. Cook these for another five minutes and then drain away the water.

In a frying pan, heat up a quarter of a cup of olive oil and a clove of garlic, minced fine. When oil is hot, add the broccoli and cook until it is just tender. Sprinkle on the rest of the parmesan cheese, cover pan and turn heat way down until vegetable is served.

6 P.M.: Remove the veal slices from the milk and dust them with flour. Place a large skillet over medium-high heat with a half-stick of butter and a splash of olive oil. When butter has melted, brown the veal quickly on both sides — frying it for four or five minutes on a side. Then add the juice of one lemon and a shot of your dinner wine. Lower heat and cut a second lemon into thin slices and spread them over the veal. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and cover pan over lowest possible heat until ready to serve.

6:15 P.M.: The baked apples. Peel apples and cut out the cores. (If you look in the drawer over there, you just might find an apple corer. No? Lotsaluck, then.) Put the cored apples in a baking dish with a half-inch of water. Place twotablespoons of sugar into the center of each apple and top it with a chunk of butter.

6:30 P.M.: As you remove the baked rice from the oven, put in the apples and increase the heat to 350 degrees. They should be baked just as you are finishing the rest ofthe dinner in about a half hour. By this time you should be discovering the shortest distance to a lover's heart.

Heat some rum in a small saucepan and spoon it over the apples, just before serving, touch the apples with a match. And as the rum goes up in flames, your wife should completely melt. If not, it's time for you to ask yourself a serious question: Can this marriage be saved?

Economy, taste in a hurry

How about a good main dish bean recipe that's fast, easy, economical, and best of all very delicious. Old West Pot can be prepared in just half an hour.

This great meal-in-a-rush starts with staples you may already have on hand. A can of baked beans, plus canned kidney beans, lima beans, and tomatoes make this recipe a snap. You don't need to fuss with soaking the beans overnight.

Equally easy is the seasoning. Then simply top with shredded cheddar cheese and you have an inexpensive, but hearty, main dish.

OLD WEST BEAN POT

- 1 can (19-oz.) baked beans
- 1 can (14-oz.) kidney beans, drained
- 1 can (14-oz.) lima beans, drained
- 1 cup chopped green pepper
- 1 can (about 14-oz.) tomatoes
- 1 cup cooking onions (diced)
- Salt and pepper to taste.
- ½ cup shredded cheddar cheese
- Paprika.

Combine beans, pepper, tomatoes, salt, pepper and onions in 2-quart casserole. Sprinkle with cheese and paprika. Bake in 375° oven 30 minutes, until hot and bubbling. 6 to 8 servings.

Knife sharpeners should make stab

Times News Service

NEW YORK — In a department store's cookery section not long ago, I fell into conversation with the store's knife buyer, a bright young man who had one overriding lament.

He had no trouble selling the best and most expensive knives, he said, but he found that customers often refused to buy a sharpening steel to go with them. "Then they come back in a month," the young buyer went on, "and complain that their Wusthofs are dull."

It was his supposition, and it rings true to me, that many home cooks are uncomfortable using one of the long sharpening steels.

If you do feel apprehensive, my first suggestion is that you try to get over it.

But let's say you still wish you didn't have to use the steel. Obviously, your knives will suffer. They should, in fact, be honed by a steel at every use.

The next best thing to a steel isn't nearly as imposing. It's a little ceramic honing stick, which has an extremely hard abrasive surface that sharpens the knives. The most widely seen one is called a Zip-Zap. It is 5½ inches long, the ceramic bar taking up 3½ inches of its total length and a knobby wooden handle the rest.

This tool doesn't look nearly as fine as a traditional steel and it isn't as durable — I broke one just by dropping it on the tiles of the kitchen floor. But it does do the job very well, without requiring you to move the knife at all.

The knife is held stationary while the ceramic is moved along the length of the blade. First one side of the blade is honed, then the other. You do it by pushing the ceramic bar away from you, keeping it at a 20 degree angle to the blade.

A bit more expensive than the Zip-Zap is the ceramic honing stick made by Copco (it sells for $7 at Bloomingdale's; the Zip-Zap for $4). In trying out one against the other recently I found that I preferred the Copco because it had a longer handle and was thus better suited to large fists.

A sharpening steel or a ceramic honing stick won't be sufficient if your knives are truly dull. Then you need a sharpening stone, usually of silicone carbide. But an advance on that common stone was made recently in the form of something called the DMT Diamond Whetstone. It is costly — a six-inch long, rectangular stone costs $34 from, among other places, the Commercial Kitchen, P.O. Box 191, Port Washington, N.Y. 11050.

The reason for the expense is that the stone's sharpening surface is a layer of nickel impregnated with diamond dust. The abrasive capacity of this tool is marvelous, allowing it to restore some extraordinarily dull blades.

Auto trade deficit rises

TORONTO (CP) — Canada's deficit in automotive trade with the United States totalled $539.9 million in the first three months of this year, the Canadian Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada reports.

That compares with a deficit of $494.1 million in the similar period a year ago.

Canada showed a surplus of $357.9 million on motor vehicles, exporting $1.55 billion worth to the U.S. while importing $1.19 billion. A year ago, the surplus for the period was $740 million.

Canada accumulated deficits of $206.5 million in trade of engines and parts, and $687.3 million on parts and accessories. A year ago, the deficit was $174.9 million for engines and parts, while trade in parts and accessories showed a surplus of $1.06 billion.

One of the most ornamental of the herb plants is Rosemary. The light blue flowers, usually called mauve, appear in groups in the axils of the leaves, which are evergreen, dark, and shiny on the surface and greyish with minute hairs on the underside.

Although only an inch long and quarter-inch wide, the leaves are tightly packed on a healthy plant, so that flowering is plentiful.

May is the time to fully enjoy this plant. On the south or west of a low growing weeping crab or cherry tree whose pink flowers form a contrasting background, a group of three Rosemary is immediately admired.

Part of its charm is the delightful fragrance which comes from the aromatic leaves on warm days, and indeed is present at all seasons although it is not "free in the air" in cool weather as the old gardeners used to say. In winter, leaves can still be picked for adding their unusual nutmeg flavor to meat and soup dishes. But do this lightly for it is powerful if used with a free hand.

Although native to mediterranean rocky hillsides, this Rosmarinus officinalis is also winter hardy on the southern end of Vancouver Island.

Rosmarinus is a delightful botanical name for this plant. Literally it translates from the Latin to Spray of the Sea.

Given a sunny well drained soil, Rosemary will last for many years. As with Lavender, another Mediterraneah shrubby herb, I find the plants are greatly improved when pruned lightly each year just at the end of the best flower display even before they turn brown.

Just cut each flowered section of the stems. At once new shoots appear lower on the plant, filling in the shrub to keep it bushy and thus more winter hardy. Occasionally a bad winter wind may kill sections of a Rosemary which caught a "draught" but an April pruning to remove all damaged parts before the new growth starts will usually recondition the plant.

I have seen a 10-foot Rosemary but it was not beautiful. It had never been pruned; had only three straggling branches reaching up an eastern wall and seldom showed more than a half dozen groups of blossoms. It had little perfume because it grew in shade from taller shrubs to the east.

Lavender hedges were once seen in front gardens of lower Fairfield. They were attractive most of the year, but especially in July with their spikes of flowers, much admired and envied by summer visitors from colder Canadian climates.

Similarly a Rosemary hedge would be delightful. Well suited out of winter northeat wind and in full sun within the reach of actual sea spray, Rosmarinus would indeed be a feature through the year.

In a long border, groups of blue bearded (German) irises with others of yellow and pink through the early summer would form a distinctive combination. Both irisis and Rosemary enjoy a rather stony poor soil with little moisture holding humus. In winter these points are important; and in summer the full sunshine ripens the iris rhizomes for future flower spikes and the branches of Rosemary to produce the hundreds of little blue flowers.

With a suitable spot you might think of starting a worthwhile grouping of either Rosemary or of Lavender. Reasonably fast growing after the small first-year growth is made, they will reach two feet in about three years with light pruning each year to keep them compact and productive.

Geologists abandon bulging volcano slope

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — The U.S. Geological Survey volcano watch force has abandoned the slopes of Mount St. Helens because of a large avalanche that scientists say has left the entire north flank unprotected from a major mudslide.

Earthquakes continued to jolt the volcano Tuesday. The University of Washington geophysics department said numerous quakes in the 3.0 range on the Richter scale rocked the mountain in the morning and several above 4.0 occurred through the day.

The USGS withdrew its watch force Tuesday from the observation post, located at Timberline Camp at the 4,300-foot level on the side of the 9,677-foot peak. It is at the same elevation — but about 1 mile northwest — of the stopping point of Monday's avalanche of snow and ice that cascaded 4,000 feet down from a growing bulge on the mountainside.

The post, used to make measurements on targets placed on the mountain to calculate surface movement and analyze gas emissions from the crater, was moved to a nearby ridge that is protected by a deep valley between it and the volcano.

Monday's avalanche, jarred loose by an earthquake, sent an 800-foot wide slab of snow, ice and gravel down both sides of Sugar Bowl Glacier. Geologists described it as a relatively minor slide compared to the massive avalanche they say could still crash down without warning.

"It's the time of year for avalanches," said Charlotte Staats, a Forest Service representative. "The scientists are not overly excited about it."

Cuba ships mental and dying

Times News Services

KEY WEST, Fla. — U.S. Navy doctors treating Cuban refugees have charged that Cuba is shipping mental patients and the dying among thousands seeking asylum in the United States.

Dr. Tom Valdes said he believes Cuba is sending the sick "on purpose to hurt people."

"We have gotten some terminal cases here, people with cancer who will die soon," said Valdes, who fled Cuba 15 years ago.

Dr. J. R. Perez-Poveda said one refugee had to be fed by tube because his esophagus had been eaten away by lye during a suicide attempt in Cuba.

One woman lay on a cot staring at the ceiling while Dr. Benjamin Quiles telephoned government agencies to try to find her relatives.

"We haven't been able to establish any communication with her," Valdes said of the woman. "We have had several like that the last few days. They don't have any touch with reality."

Valdes said some refugees told him Cuban authorities took a few patients from a mental hospital and put them on ships.

The doctors also treated a man suffering from leprosy, Perez-Poveda said: "They knew he had leprosy. He said they came to his home and put him on the boat."

Key West was virtually cleared of refugees Tuesday, most having been sent either to Miami or Fort Chafee, Ark., but a new wave of refugees arrived today, raising to more than 39,500 the number that have arrived since the freedom sealift began April 21.

After a record one-day influx of more than 5,000 refugees at Key West Sunday, boats suddenly stopped leaving Cuba, and ship captains said today Cuban patrol boats prevented them from leaving Mariel while bus after bus brought more refugees to be loaded onto boats.

One complete "busload appeared to me to be prostitutes," one captain said.

Federal authorities say they may open new refugee-processing centres at military bases in Maryland and Pennsylvania to augment facilities in Arkansas and the Florida Panhandle.

Florida state legislators, meanwhile, refused to pay for educating the estimated 15,600 Cuban and Haitain children who have arrived in the state, and are seeking federal help.

Refugees were registering for school in the Miami area at the rate of 60 children per day — or the equivalent of a normal-sized elementary school every 2½ weeks.

Owner's representatives of a hired ship testified Tuesday they were forced at gunpoint to leave Cuba with 426 refugees they did not know, instead of the 148 relatives they went for.

Carl Schoeller told the House of Representatives judiciary committee Cuban soldiers awoke the ship's crew and forced the refugees aboard.

Then when they got back to Key West, he said, U.S. customs officials impounded the ship for transporting illegal aliens.

Meanwhile, President Carter is expected to issue a policy statement this week on what the United States intends to do about the influx of Cuban and Haitian refugees.

On Tuesday, a top U.S. official — in a strong attack at Fidel Castro — accused the Cuban leader of unleashing guerrilla war against the United States — "using people as bullets."

London siege inspired by Iraq?

LONDON (AP) — Scotland Yard said today the brains behind the takeover of the Iranian Embassy two weeks ago was Sami Mohammed Ali, an Iraqi code-named The Fox and apparently a master of disguise.

The announcement heightened speculation that Iraqi diplomats aided the six Iranian Arab gunmen who seized the embassy in a six-day siege that resulted in the death of five terrorists and two of their 26 hostages.

Commander Peter Duffy, head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist squad, said Ali, 35, had been spotted with a shapely European-looking brunette "with other members of the gang" at four West London apartments before the siege that ended May 5 when British commandos stormed the building.

Duffy said. "We're actively seeking these two people," referring to Ali and the woman. "His whereabouts now are a mystery."

Duffy did not disclose where his information originated but police sources said Scotland Yard interrogators had "come up with a lot of stuff" from the sole surviving terrorist, Fowzi Badavi Nejada, 23, an Iranian Arab.

Scotland Yard sources said all six gunmen held Iraqi passports and came to London from Basra, in southern Iraq close to the border with Iran's oil-rich Khuzestan province. The gunmen claimed they were Iranian Arabs seeking autonomy for the province.

OKC Corp. liquidates all assets

DALLAS (UPI) — Stockholders of the OKC Corp., a multi-million dollar holding company with interests in oil, concrete and real estate, voted Tuesday to liquidate the company's assets and close its doors.

The vote came just a few hours after The Wall Street Journal published a report that OKC Chairman Cloyce Box, a former professional football player, may soon be indicted for allegedly accepting kickbacks. Company attorneys tried to block publication of the article in court.

OKC spokesman Robert Miller said publication of the article and the liquidation vote were coincidence. The liquidation, pending approval of the stockholders, was announced last summer.

Students, police clash

Local police merger urged

Staff, cost efficiencies stressed, mayors wary

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The B.C. Police Commission has urged total amalgamation of municipal police forces in Greater Victoria.

The commission, in a report completed late last month, recommends amalgamation of police forces in Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt, Oak Bay and Central Saanich as the best way of achieving greater efficiency and economy in policing the area.

In a task force study undertaken by the commission in 1978, amalgamation was one of several options proposed.

Judge Roy McQueen, commission chairman, told the Times today the report, the result of more than four months' study, has been sent to mayors, police boards and police unions of the five municipalities asking for their comments.

McQueen said it was not the commission's role to force the decision on the municipalities but only to spark debate that might lead to agreement on what it considers a good idea.

He said the study did not involve the western communities which are serviced by the RCMP.

However, he said logic dictates they should eventually be included.

He noted the 30,000 residents in the western communities pay nothing in direct taxes for policing because the area is unincorporated while residents of incorporated communities over 5,000, such as Sidney pay for police costs through their property taxes.

McQueen said he expected amalgamation would be met with considerable opposition from local politicians but thought the concept was generally endorsed by police officers.

"My main conern is certainly service to the public and cost.

"We'll have to study it and see if it means better service to the public."

Mayor Doug Watts of Oak Bay was also apprehensive about amalgamation but said he favored centralizing certain support services.

Mayor Mel Couvelier of Saanich was out of town today and Esquimalt mayor Ken Hill and Victoria mayor Bill Tindall couldn't be reached for comment.

The five municipal mayors and police boards have been discussing integration of some services for several months.

Among the services being considered are records, dispatch, identification, a common emergency number (911), and specialized services such as a dog-tracking team.

McQueen said it was ridiculous for each department to have its own dispatch unit.

"The costs are just tremendous," he said. "Each department needs at least five people to operate the unit on a 24-hour basis."

SILHOUETTES AT SUNSET lend a surrealistic quality to a normally wide-awake exciting time — the annual Jaycee Fair. While a magic moment like this might not last, the stage show, exhibits, games, midway, popcorn and candyfloss are all a perennial dream for kids. Set up in Memorial Arena, the curling rink and adjacent property, the fair winds up Saturday.

Delivered paper price to increase

To help offset rising costs, especially newsprint, the home delivery price of the Victoria Times will be increased 50 cents a month effective June 1, Circulation Director Roy Comrie said today.

Part of the increase will go to the carriers, he said, and added that the new home delivery price of $5 a month still represents a considerable saving over the newsstand price of 25 cents on weekdays and 30 cents on Saturday.

Current prepaid subscriptions will continue until expiry at the present rate of $4.50 a month. The old price will also apply to prepaid subscriptions up to one year in duration received in the Times office before June 1, 1980.

First collection at the new rate will be at the end of June.

Return of traffic fines eyed

Attorney-General Allan Williams, police officials, and automobile club executives today admitted the system of assessing penalty points against bad drivers is not working and a return to a fine system may be needed.

Their acknowledgment followed a Statistics Canada report Tuesday that shows B.C. has the worst per capita driving record of any province.

Representatives of police departments, the motor-vehicle branch, the B.C. Automobile Association and other groups were meeting in Vancouver this morning to evaluate the StatsCan report.

Williams said he will prod the government's Motor-Vehicle Task Force to come up with interim recommendations designed to put the screws on bad drivers.

The task force is looking at the possibility of replacing the point system with fines, he said. Or there may be a combination of fines plus points.

That way you get the immediate financial impact of the fine plus the loss of licence later if the driver persists in his bad habits, Williams said.

The minister said the points system by itself appears to be good for only one thing — producing paperwork.

"It is producing a tremendous volume of paperwork for police officers which is not having any positive results and is just a waste of manpower."

Bob Egby, Insurance Corp. of B.C. spokesman, said the Statistics Canada figures surprised him.

"We know there's a problem, but I didn't know about this."

William Snowdon, Victoria's new police chief, has noticed a difference in drivers since he's moved from the Mainland.

"The drivers over here are noticeably more courteous and less aggressive than in Vancouver," Snowdon said.

Nonetheless, the chief agreed the point system needs to be coupled with some other penalty.

"The point system is not a valid enforcement tool by itself," he said.

The word that B.C. drivers are the nation's worst surprised him.

"I've driven in some eastern cities and I would

City poultry plant closing

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The Sooke Road plant of Maplewood Poultry Processors Ltd. will close by Tuesday and all 100 employees laid off.

But the Times learned today a deal to sell the plant to Pan-Ready Poultry of Port Coquitlam is being put together.

Maplewood manager Len Guy, asked about a rumored shutdown, admitted layoff notices were posted last Friday.

He refused further comment, directing all questions to Maplewood president Brian Hambley, who was reached at Maplewood's idled Abbotsford plant.

"The Victoria plant is in the process of being sold and we would hope that any interruption of its operation would be minimal," Hambley said.

He pointed out that the possible sale of Maplewood to Cargill Grain is still dependent on approval from the Foreign Investment Review Agency so it's not definite, despite the government's reversal Tuesday on the sale to the international conglomerate.

(See also page 28.)

"Ottawa's talking several weeks or months before anything's done," Hambley said.

Maplewood's Abbotsford operation, which employed 135, was suspended April 18, and Hambley says poultry producers are feeling the pressure.

"It's a very sad state of affairs, but the minister (Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt) knew this would happen.

"We told him about it weeks ago but he wouldn't listen. He did it his way," Hambley said.

Pan-Ready Poultry, which operates Scott's Poultry in Port Coquitlam, is the growers' cooperative that offered to buy Maplwood's Abbotsford plant but just withdrew its bid.

Hambley was asked how Pan-Ready could buy the Victoria plant if it had been unable to make good its offer for the Abbotsford operation.

"They're getting a little help from Victoria," he said.

"But nothing is complete," he added. "There are many loose ends.

"We don't want to get our customers upset and we're confident there won't be any disruption of supply."

By AL FORREST

For the first time in a year the Victoria mortgage interest rate has gone below the 14-per-cent mark in a bidding war for customers.

The downward trend is expected to continue if the Bank of Canada rate falls on Thursday.

The Victoria interest rate has ranged from 10 per cent to 17.5 per cent during the past five years.

National Trust today became the first company to offer a rate below 14 per cent this year when it announced five-year closed mortgages now are available at 13.75 per cent.

Later in the morning the Royal Bank of Canada said that effective Thursday it will cut its mortgage rate by 1.75 points to 13.75 per cent for one, three and five-year terms.

The Royal is also chopping its prime lending rate to 14.75 per cent from 15.75 per cent on Thursday.

Other banks, trust companies and credit unions also announced reductions and new mortgaging plans.

The Bank of Nova Scotia has reduced its rate to 14.25, down three-quarters of a point, for one, three and five-year terms.

Toronto-Dominion has cut its rate to 14.5 per cent for all closed mortgages. This is down from 15 per cent for one and three-year terms and down from 15.25 for five-year money.

Royal Trust has reduced its rate to 14.25 per cent for all closed mortgages.

Victoria Public Savings Credit Union has reduced its rate to 14.75 per cent from 15.75 per cent for one-year open mortgages.

The companies are responding to a slide in Canadian rates and a collapse in the United States.

For example, below the border, Savings and Loan companies, the largest residential mortgage lenders in the nation, reduced its rates from 17.5 to 12.75 in a single week.

If, as expected, the Bank of Canada announces a lower bank rate on Thursday, a new round of reductions could be forthcoming next week, although spokesmen for financial houses said the bottom might not be far away.

A yes vote in the Quebec referendum next week could push interest rates up, despite the downward trend in the U.S.

In Victoria, W.A. Southwell said the psychological shock of sudden high interest rates during the winter and early spring was almost more than some families could bear.

"I know it was something they were discussing every day and it was a great worry. I hope people will

Clashes mount in Seoul

SEOUL (Reuter) — Hundreds of armed troops and vehicles moved into the centre of Seoul today to seal off areas around official residences and government offices after thousands of police and students battled in the streets.

Witnesses said at least 20 police and 29 students were injured, some seriously. It was the bloodiest clash between militant students and police since campus disturbances to reinforce demands for democratic reforms and the lifting of martial law started at the end of March.

In one incident about 200 police kicked and clubbed the front ranks of a 50,000-strong student march as it approached the city hall.

The chanting demonstrators, including many women, approached within 70 metres of the government offices before police swinging clubs hurled themselves at the leading students. Witnesses counted 15 students felled and kicked. They were arrested while the rest of the crowd scattered into side streets.

In another battle at Yonsei University student sources said at least 14 of their number were injured.

Levesque sounds like beaten man

By PETER HADEKEL

MONTREAL — Rene Levesque sounds like a beaten man in the final week of the referendum campaign.

While he has not yet conceded defeat in public, Levesque has already begun to make excuses for the setback the Yes side is expected to receive in next Tuesday's referendum on sovereignty-association.

And ironically, Levesque is delivering his message to the largest, most exuberant crowds of his entire campaign. With less than a week to go, Yes organizers have finally agreed to stage mass rallies where thousands of supporters sing, wave Quebec flags and cheer for a sovereign Quebec.

But it is all a bit too late, as the tone in Levesque's words betrays.

"No matter what happens we have at least won a solid, healthy and beautiful majority of francophone voters," he says in putting the best face on the outcome.

Levesque then delivers the punchline. It's the English voters who will be responsible for defeating the referendum because "they will be voting massively No."

"The unilingual anglophones especially are shut up in a propaganda that is manipulated and controlled by an establishment that has always exploited Quebec," he says.

"They'll do anything to keep us stuck in the status quo."

Levesque told 5,000 boisterous supporters in Montreal North that it would be "hypocritical" to ignore the French-English split in the vote, adding that the real answer to the referendum question must come from francophones.

Quoting from the 1963 report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, Levesque said the real conflict in Canada is between two majorities: the English one in Canada and the French one in Quebec.

Levesque's attempt to make scapegoats of Quebec's English minority is a subtle one. He says he respects their right to vote No and he believes in the principle of "one man one vote."

But at the same time he ridicules Claude Ryan, leader of the No campaign, for wanting a vote "without roots, without family, without belonging.

"We've got to start looking after ourselves, and it's high time," he says.

Claude Ryan has asked Levesque to prepare his troops to accept defeat, but if anything, Levesque is stoking the fires of Quebec nationalism more fiercely in the final days.

He is bitter about the

A caravan of 'grannies' take Dempster challenge

VANCOUVER (CP) — Therese Tessier, 56, who last year became the first woman to make it solo up the Dempster Highway to Inuvik in a camper, is planning to do the same thing this summer with about 100 other women.

She calls it "a caravan of grannies."

The trip will start June 15 in Cache Creek, and will retrace her last year's route to Tuktoyaktuk on the Arctic Ocean. Then the vehicles will be taken by barge along the Mackenzie and Athabaska rivers to Northern Alberta.

But before the three-month trip starts, she has a lot of work to do — interviewing the more than 200 applicants who have said they want to join her, and finding a place to do it.

"I don't know how it's going to go.

"The first problem I have to solve is where to meet the people. I just drive around in my camper all the time. That's where I live."

Deciding who gets to go is "going to be difficult, so I've had to come up with some way to screen the applicants."

First, she said, applicants will have to show her a "clean bill of health", from a doctor. Then, they'll have to supply a safety certificate from a garage that states their vans are in sound mechanical order.

The last catch, she said, will be a full wallet.

"I figure it's going to take about $3,500 for the trip. That can be in cash, credit cards or cheques."

Throughout North America, women are reaching out for the challenge, including one 82-year-old who wrote saying she could "out-hike, out-pack and out-canoe any 35-year-old."

And why no men on the trip? Simple, she says.

"None have applied."

Asian refugees in good health

VANCOUVER (CP) — The state of health of the 300 Vietnamese and Cambodian refugees who arrive in B.C. each month is "pretty good," say two doctors responsible for medical screening of the arrivals from Southeast Asia.

Dr. Allen Heimann and Dr. Douglas Mackenzie told the senior staff conference of Community Health Services that since January of this year, 4,387 refugees, mainly Vietnamese boat people of Chinese origin and Cambodians who escaped persecution and the threat of annihilation by starvation, have arrived in B.C. and have been screened medically.

"Their health is pretty good considering everything they'be been through," Heimann, an epidemiologist from Victoria, in charge of the screening program for the provincial ministry of health, said later Tuesday in an interview.

Mackenzie, who has retired as the chief of tuberculosis control for the ministry, agreed.

Mackenzie said that when the boat people first started arriving about a year ago, there was some concern B.C. might be subjected to an influx of exotic infectious diseases, "but this just hasn't happened."

They are checked for tuberculosis by medical personnel at the four refugee camps in southeast Asia, he said.

Some arriving here have already received treatment, but none are permitted to enter Canada if their tuberculosis is in an infectious state, Mackenzie said.

Arson cause of fires?

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Forest service officials suspect arson is the cause of at least six fires now burning in the Fort Nelson area of the Prince George forest fire region.

"We're quite certain a number of fires have been deliberately set," district manager Art Joyce said Tuesday. "At least six or more."

Eleven new fires were reported in the district Tuesday, bringing the total to 123. Six were started by lightning.

Police raid homes

VANCOUVER (CP) — An RCMP spokesman said the commercial crime squad raided seven homes and business Tuesday as part of a joint investigation with the Winnipeg detachment into the Winnipeg Mortgage Exchange Ltd.

The spokesman said the raids carried out in Vancouver, North Vancouver, Richmond and West Vancouver involved a law firm, a chartered accounting firm, two other businesses and three private residences. He would not say whether anything was seized.

He said Winnipeg RCMP had received several complaints from people who invested money in the company. He said the company had invested about $16 million in mortgages in B.C. and had defaulted on some. The company went into receivership last August.

Uranium ban

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Fourteen Japanese union leaders received a standing ovation from delegates to the Confederation of Canadian Unions convention Monday after calling for a ban on the export of Canadian uranium and Candu reactors to that country.

"We would like Canada to stop exporting bad things to Japan," a Japanese translator told the delegates. "We would like it if you exported only good things."

The Japanese leaders from Sohio, a national union representing 4.5 million workers, including most government workers, teachers and railway workers, are seeking international support for a moratorium on nuclear power in Japan.

Spill fear unwarranted

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — The Hooker Chemical plant may not be as great a hazard as North Shore residents fear, says a report from the North Vancouver Chamber of Commerce's community hazards study committee.

The report plays down figures in the Beak Consultants' report on the plant which suggests that a spill of 400 pounds of chlorine is likely every eight years and an earthquake causing release of 1,000 pounds every 30 years.

The chamber report suggests that Hooker's 22-year disaster-free record contradicts the Beak figures.

The chamber report says that the possibility of a chemical spill during transportation, especially in a rail car derailment, is a far greater danger than a spill at the plant.

It also criticizes gaps in present emergency plans — lack of a complete North Shore evacuation plan, failure of railways and other transportation facilities to report all accidents involving hazardous chemicals, and a failure to educate the public on how to respond to an emergency.

While praising Hooker's safety record, the report criticizes the firm for failure to communicate with the public.

Before the release of the Beak report and the subsequent public concern, many residents near the plant did not even know it manufactured chlorine, it says.

CHANGE YOUR CAT LITTER.

The water test shows how Litter Fresh™ expands.

NEW LITTER FRESH STAYS FRESHER LONGER THAN CLAY LITTER BECAUSE IT IS MORE THAN TWICE AS ABSORBENT.

Clay just gets wet. Litter Fresh expands. It soaks up more than twice the moisture that clay does. So Litter Fresh stays fresher longer.

Because it stays fresher longer, you may decide to use less cat litter, or, you may decide to use the same amount and change it less often.

LITTER FRESH CONTAINS CHLOROPHYLL. NATURE'S OWN ODOUR FIGHTER.

Chlorophyll is a natural deodorizer. It actually fights ammonia, the cause of cat box odours. So, new Litter Fresh gives you super odour control. It's nicer for you, your cat and your guests.

Litter Fresh gets its odour-fighting chlorophyll from alfalfa.

LITTER FRESH IS DUST FREE.

Clay litter is dirt so of course there is dust. Dust when you put it in. Dust when the cat tracks it out. Litter Fresh comes in tiny, dust-free pellets.

Litter Fresh is such a refreshing change.

But workers over at the Dana Farm Soap Factory on Salt Spring Island say it will all come out in the wash

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Goat milk is for drinking, right? Definitely.

It's also for making cheese, yogurt, ice cream, shampoo . . . shampoo?

But while those extra items have been developed at the Dana Farm Soap Factory on Salt Spring Island, the company is limiting itself to shampoo for the time being. If all goes well the novel product should be on sale in city health food and organic product stores this week.

The little firm isn't exactly ready to tackle Clairol or Johnson & Johnson for a big slice of the shampoo market. In fact, a roaring success would probably dismay the company's principals who consider quality of life at least as important as success.

The product is already doing well in Vancouver, the Cowichan Valley and on Salt Spring, where anything to do with goats strikes most islanders as the most natural thing in the world.

How the folks at Dana Farm got into the soap business may not rank with Henry Ford deciding to mass produce cars but it's an intriguing insight into how a cottage industry can be established.

Jim Scott used to be chief editor of J.J. Douglas (now Douglas and McIntyre Ltd.), a Vancouver book publishing firm. He managed a book store in Ganges for awhile and then, about a year ago, he took the plunge — right into the deep and dangerous waters of full-time farming.

Scott wanted to start a goat cheese operation but health department rules and capital costs postponed that dream.

Raw milk, a few chickens, ducks and goat kids accounted for the past year's income.

When a new couple moved in to manage the YWCA's Yawaca Outdoor Centre next door, Scott invited his new neighbors over for dinner, partly because he's neighborly but also because he wanted to ask the new managers to keep camp visitors off the farm.

The farm family met Tom and Diane Stokes and hit it off instantly. Scott relaxed and began talking about goats, his favorite subject. He has 42 at the moment, 18 in milk.

Scott had spoken to some goat breeders in Oregon City who gave up a milk route to produce a line of goat milk cosmetics. He mentioned to the Stokes he wished he knew a chemist who could come up with workable formulas for a similar product line.

Diane began to laugh and Tom got red in the face.

"I'm a biochemist," Stokes said.

Scott supplied the milk and Stokes, when he wasn't organizing a camp activity, did research with goat milk.

A Richmond native, Stokes had attended school in Texas and did research at the University of Colorado before joining Mountain High, a Boulder firm run by Canadians producing ice cream and yogurt.

He moved back to Canada and a Coast Guard stint before moving to Salt Spring.

One of the first results of Tom's goat milk research was a good soap but making it was labor intensive and it wasn't the right product to start with.

Then, a little more than a month ago, 10 months after he tackled his first gallon of goat milk, Stokes raced over to Dana Farm.

"I've got it," he yelled.

Stokes says goat milk contains many of the ingredients found only in the most expensive shampoos.

As the blurb on the bottle says: "Goat milk has been used since the time of Cleopatra in hair and body care lotions."

The listed ingredients are undiluted goat milk, sodium lauryl sulphate (derived from coconut oil) and lavender flower oil.

Feedback from users has been positive and the five principals of the semi-formal company all want it to succeed . . . within reason, of course.

What's their production schedule?

"Well, we were going to mix up a batch last night but these friends dropped over," Stokes said. "Maybe tonight."

Now that's Salt Spring enterprise as it was meant to be.

Ganges sewer petition to get second probe

The RCMP will investigate a second time to find out whether a petition supporting a sewer development in Ganges on Salt Spring Island was padded.

Assistant deputy attorney-general Neil McDiarmid confirmed today the new investigation was ordered after Yvette Valcourt, Salt Spring Island director on the Capital Regional District, had approached his department with information she claims proves the petition had been padded with the names of ineligible people.

Previously, Valcourt had also met with Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

A spokesman for the RCMP detachment in Ganges said the original investigation had ended with insufficient evidence to lay any charges.

Valcourt has accused CRD executive director Dennis Young of illegally certifying the petition, which she says was used in 1977 to prove the need for a sewer.

But Young says the petition was never used as a basis for deciding in favor of construction.

He says he "certified it quite properly, believing it to be an accurate petition."

He says the CRD did not act on the petition because of complaints received about its value. The regional district, he says, did not take action until the regional health officer Dr. Allen Arneil warned in a report a sewer system was needed.

The $4.1-million system is needed, Young says, to replace malfunctioning septic tanks and allow the school and hospital to operate properly.

A municipal affairs spokesman confirmed the petition had no direct bearing on the decision to go ahead with the sewer. He said, however, the allegations by Valcourt had to be investigated and her material had been passed to the RCMP by the attorney-general's department.

Planning for the sewer is continuing, he added.

Valcourt claims that pensioners and others on fixed incomes may lose their homes if forced to pay for the sewer system but Young says many island residents will be helped by government homeowner grants. Those generally wanting more development on the island are small business people who, in some cases, have lived on the island for generations.

A new sewer system could pave the way for more development in the downtown core.

WCB okays ferry

The Workers' Compensation Board today cleared the way for the sailing of the Victoria Princess on her inaugral Seattle-Victoria run Friday.

A final WCB inspection of asbestos contamination on the vessel, the former Queen of Prince Rupert, undertaken Tuesday has revealed levels of free asbestos are within compliance levels of WCB regulations.

The WCB rushed to complete the tests at its lab in Vancouver overnight.

Normally the tests take a week or more to complete.

"We're satisfied the vessel is safe for crew and passengers," a WCB spokesman said today.

Mechanics vote strike

About 180 car mechanics and body shop workers in Victoria have voted 97 per cent in favor of strike action — but negotiations are continuing.

"We are making good progress at the present time," said Art Glass, spokesman for the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the union negotiating with seven companies represented by the Automotive Employers Association of Victoria.

Rose Manor has not appealed an arbitration pay award to its employees, a company spokesman said today.

The personal-care home has sought legal advice on some wording in the binding award but is not disputing the pay scales, board president Winifred Wardman said.

Public inquiry urged into Saanich shooting

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A Vancouver lawyer has written to Attorney-General Allan Williams suggesting a public inquiry be held into a 1978 shooting in Saanich that wounded a veteran police officer and notorious prison escaper.

In his 1½-page letter, Craig Paterson said the escaper, Thomas Lackey, told him from his hospital bed just hours after incident that he had been deliberately shot in the head by a police officer after he had given himself up.

However, the Saanich police board has released a statement on the incident prepared by Police Chief Robert Peterson and tabled at the board meeting on Monday.

The report says a debriefing session exonerated the police officers of any wrongdoing.

The statement arose in response to a recent publication in the Times of the board's refusal to release the gunshot report required under the firearms regulations of the Police Act in cases where there are injuries or deaths.

The report was made to the police board chairman Mayor Mel Couvelier on Feb. 8, 1979, but has still not been made public.

Allegations of deliberate shooting were made by defence counsel David Gibbons during Lackey's trial last December in which Lackey was convicted of a series of crimes including the attempted murder of Sgt. William Hillcoat in the Nov. 8, 1978 shoot-out at McKenzie and Cedar Hill Cross Road.

But Peterson said a three-hour debriefing session Feb. 7, 1980, completely exonerated Hillcoat and Constable Robert Love of any wrongdoing.

Love arrived minutes after the shoot-out and had Lackey by the hair with his revolver pointed at the right side of Lackey's head when Hillcoat stumbled into them causing Love's gun to discharge.

But Peterson rejected that theory. He said if it was an attempted execution the officers wouldn't have missed. He felt also it would have been impossible for Lackey's head wounds to be caused by Love's gun discharging because of Love's position holding the man.

The chief concluded Lackey's facial wounds occurred when one of the four shots fired by Hillcoat in the exchange of gunfire struck a solid object, fragmented and imbedded in Lackey's forehead and eye.

Paterson, who represented Lackey in an unrelated civil matter prior to the shooting incident, said in an interview Tuesday he felt there were sufficient grounds to warrant an inquiry based on the comments Lackey made to him and other evidence brought up in the trial.

Lackey was sentenced to 18 years in prison and is currently at the regional psychiatric centre near Abbotsford undergoing treatment for injuries received in the gun battle.

Hillcoat received a shotgun blast in the stomach and thighs and, while he has since returned to work, still has 36 shotgun pellets in his body.

Peterson said a formal inquiry was never held into the allegations because no complaint had been lodged.

But lawyer Paterson said the reason for that was simply Lackey's lack of knowledge of the complaint procedure.

Paterson said Lackey, an American citizen, had assumed the crown would launch an inquiry into the allegations and hadn't realized he himself would have to initiate the action.

"He's rather cynical anything would be done."

Paterson said he has now asked Williams if any complaints or requests for information on the complaint procedure have been made to the government in connection with the case.

Paterson is not alone in suggesting there should be an inquiry.

Defence lawyer Gibbons has supported such a move and so has Dr. Michael Jackson, professor of criminal law and prisoners' rights at the University of Victoria.

He said he was appalled at Peterson's suggestion that a ricochet or fragmented bullet caused Lackey's facial wounds.

If that was the case then why wasn't the evidence given in court? he wondered.

"It's outrageous now for the police force to come up with a different conclusion as to what happened," he said.

Vic West full of beans?

By NORMAN GIDNEY

It sounds like a low-budget science fiction film — the bean sprouts that invaded Victoria West.

That's the plan of Chinese restaurant owner Spencer Kong, if he can get city approval for a commercial bean sprout operation at 511 William Street.

Spencer Kong of the Jade Palace restaurant in Market Square made the proposal to the Advisory Planning Commission on Tuesday night.

The audience and Kong himself found it hard not to laugh while the restaurateur outlined his request for rezoning from single family to commercial.

"It doesn't make any noise. It doesn't bother anybody. It just grows by itself."

The sprouts are grown in big tanks, sometimes bathtubs, in a warm humid atmosphere. Water is sloshed over the beans and changed every few hours around the clock. In two days they're ready to eat.

Kong said it's the coming thing in Victoria. There's a big potential local market.

Advice from public sought on centre

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Designers, performers, trade union officials, international experts — the people planning Victoria's convention centre want your help.

Ken Stratford, consultant to the Pan-Pacific Conference and Trade Centre Society, said Tuesday the organization is looking for Victorians with special skills to advise how the centre should be used.

"There are people in the community who have a tremendous amount of skills. Some of them are retired. Some are semi-retired," he said.

STRATFORD
. . . special skills needed

The Pan-Pacific group would like to meet them. It proposes a number of task forces headed by these knowledgable individuals to provide expert advice to the board which will manage and operate the $8 million convention centre.

Some of the experts would be named to the nine-member management board itself.

Stratford listed a number of areas the Pan-Pacific group would like to hear from:

International affairs — someone with knowledge of other countries. "They've been around a bit globally . . . A skilled type who may have been an international negotiator." Perhaps a former United Nations official.

Performing arts — an individual familiar with drama, music, opera and the like to suggest cultural uses for the convention centre, such as noon concerts.

Design — the Pan Pacific group wants a special Victoria flavor to permeate the centre so visitors will get a strong impression of the city's identity. They want help in designing the "street furniture," banners and decorations and ideas for adding ethnic elements when international conferences are convened here.

Labor — "we want somebody to represent labor because a big market today is national and international labor conferences."

Transportation — it's one of the major constraints on the size of convention the centre can attract, so the Pan-Pacific group will need someone who is expert in the field.

Publicity — the organizers at this stage need to get the word out. They want someone who will be a liaison with local groups, who can get them to tell their national and international affiliated organizations that Victoria is in the convention business.

"This will not just be a show thing. They'll have real policy-making power," says Stratford.

If you are interested, write Pan-Pacific, c/o 1218 Langley St., Victoria, V8W 1W2.

The rocky bluff at Fairfield field and Linden, vacant since the old Alkazar Mansions was demolished several years ago, will be built on again.

Concord Credits Ltd. has taken out a building permit at city hall for a $1 million 16-unit condominium project. It will have five storeys and a penthouse.

Island Farms Dairy is also undertaking a major expansion at its city plant. The farmer's co-op has taken out a building permit worth $150,000 for an addition to its cooler on Dowler Place.

Boer vet dies at 100

Capt. Claude Ivor Mackenzie, one of the last survivors of both the Boer War and the First World War, died here Tuesday at the age of 100.

Mackenzie, who lived at the Memorial Pavilion, had been a member of the Victoria Golf Club for 45 years.

He was born July 29, 1879, in Cork, Ireland. In 1899 at the age of 19 he joined the 3rd East Yorkshire Regiment and left for the Boer War in South Africa.
